mass, the necessity of confession, etc. Their name is said to be derived from that of a priest, their first leader. The sect has never been numerous; but a few members, it is thought, may still (1867) be found in the Pyrenæan provinces of France. See Brown, Encycl. Rel. Knowl. s. v.; Eden, s. v.

Cleobians, a branch of the Simonians (q. v.), in the first century, extinguished almost at its rise.

Cle'ōpas (Κλεόπας, contr. for Κλεόπατρος, of a renowned father), one of the two disciples who were going to Emmaus on the day of the resurrection, when Jesus himself drew near and talked with them (Luke xxiv, 18), A.D. 29. Eusebius and Jerome (Onomast. s. v. Ἐμμαούς, Emaus) make him (Κλεώπας, Cleophas) a native of Emmaus. It is a question whether this Cleopas is to be considered as identical with the CLEOPHAS (q. v.), or rather Clopas of John xix, 25, or the ALPHÆUS (q. v.) of Matt. x, 3, etc. Their identity was assumed by the later fathers and Church historians (Thiess, Comment. ii, 250 sq.). But Eusebius (H. E. iii, 11) writes the name of Alphæus, Joseph's brother, Clopas, not Cleopas; and Chrysostom and Theodoret, on the Epistle to the Galatians, call James the Just the son of Clopas. Besides this, Clopas, or Alphæus, is an Aramaic name, whereas Cleopas is apparently Greek. Again, as we find the wife and children of Clopas constantly with the family of Joseph at the time of our Lord's ministry, it is probable that he himself was dead before that time. On the whole, then, it seems safer to doubt the identity of Cleopas with Clopas, notwithstanding the similarity of names. (See Rus, Harmon. evang. III, ii, 1272 sq.; Wieseler, Chronol. Synopse, p. 431; Clemens, in the Zeitschr. f. wiss. Theol. iii, 356 sq.)

Cleöpa'tra (strictly Cleop'atra, Κλεοπάτρα, of a renowned father), a Greek female name occurring as early as Homer (Il. ix, 556), and borne especially by the Egyptian princesses after the times of Alexander (see Smith's Dict. of Class. Biog. s. v.). The following, being members of the line of the Ptolemies, who frequently intermarried with the Seleucidæ of Syria, are mentioned in the Apocrypha and Josephus, or alluded to in the Scriptures.

1. A daughter of Antiochus III (the Great), who was married to Ptolemy V (Epiphanes), B.C. 193 (see Dan. xi, 13, 16), Cœle-Syria being given as her dower (Josephus, Ant. xii, 4, 1; Appian, Syr. 5; Livy, xxxvii, 3), though Antiochus afterwards repudiated this arrangement (Polyb. xxviii, 17). See ANTIOCHUS, 2.

2. A daughter by the preceding match, who became "the wife of Ptolemy" (Esth. xi, 1) VI (Philometor), her own brother, on whose death (B.C. 146) she was violently persecuted by his successor (her own brother likewise, and for a time husband) Physcon, or Ptolemy VII, or Euergetes II (Justin. xxxviii, 8, 9; xxxix, 1, 2; Livy, Ep. 59; Diod. Sic. ii, 602, ed. Wess.) She is mentioned by Josephus as having joined her first husband in the letter addressed to Onias (q. v.) in favor of reconstructing the Jewish temple at Leontopolis (Ant. xiii, 3, 2), and as befriended in her distress by Onias (Apion, ii, 5). See PTOLEMY PHILOMETOR.

3. A daughter of the preceding by her first husband; married first (B.C. 150) to Alexander (q. v.) Balas, the Syrian usurper (1 Macc. x, 58; Josephus, Ant. xiii, 4, 1 and 5), and on his death (B.C. 146) to Demetrius (q. v.) Nicator (1 Macc. xi, 12; Josephus, Ant. xiii, 4, 7). During the captivity of the latter in Parthia, B.C. 141 (1 Macc. xiv, 1 sq.), she married his brother Antiochus (Josephus, Ant. xiii, 7, 1) VII (Sidetes), out of jealousy on account of Demetrius's connection with the Parthian princess Rhodogune, and also murdered Demetrius on his return (Appian, Syr. 68; Livy, Ep. 60), although Josephus (Ant. xiii, 9, 3) and Justin (cxxxix, 1) represent her as only refusing to receive him. She also murdered Seleucus, her son by Nicator, who on his father's death assumed the government without her consent (Appian, Syr. 69). Her other son by Nicator, Antiochus VIII (Grypus), succeeded to the throne (B.C. 125) through her influence; but afterwards, finding him not disposed to yield her all the power she desired, she attempted to poison him, but was anticipated by him, and compelled to drink the poison herself (Justin, xxxix, 2), B.C. 120. See ANTIOCHUS, 6 and 7.

4. A sister of the preceding, and the rival of her own mother (No. 2) in the affections of Ptolemy Physcon, by whose will she was left in supreme power, in connection with whichever of her own sons she might choose. She was compelled by her people to set up the eldest, Ptolemy VIII (Lathyrus); but she soon prevailed upon them to expel him, and make room for her younger and favorite son Alexander (Pausan. viii, 7), and she even sent an army against Lathyrus to Cyprus, an effort in which the Jews became involved (Josephus, Ant. xiii, 12, 2 sq.; 13, 1) through the intervention of Alexander Jannæus (q. v.). Her son Alexander retired through fear of her cruelty, but was recalled by his mother, who attempted to assassinate him, but was herself put to death (B.C. 89) before she could effect her object (Justin, xxxix, 4). See PTOLEMY LATHYRUS.

5. The second daughter of the name by the preceding marriage, and married to her own brother Lathyrus after her sister's divorce, from whom she is usually distinguished by the surname of Selenè (Σελήνη, the moon). After his exile she married Antiochus XI (Epiphanes), and on his death Antiochus X (Eusebes). She was besieged by Tigranes in Syria or Meropotamia, and either taken and killed by him (Strabo, xxi, p. 749), or, according to Josephus (Ant. xiii, 16, 4; comp. War, i, 5, 3), relieved by Lucullus's invasion of Armenia. See ANTIOCHUS, 9 and 10.

6. The last queen of Egypt, was the daughter of Ptolemy Auletes, born B.C. 69, and celebrated for her beauty and accomplishments, as also for her voluptuousness and ambition. She had various amorous and political intrigues, first with Julius Cæsar (Dion Cass. xliii, 27; Sueton. Cæs. 35), whom she even accompanied to Rome; and finally with Marc Antony (q. v.), who became so completely enamored of her as to commit suicide when falsely informed of her death, which she presently actually accomplished, it is said by causing herself to be bitten by an asp, on the capture of Alexandria by Octavianus, afterwards called Augustus, B.C. 30 (see Liddell's Hist. of Rome, chap. lxx).

was celebrated for the worship of Venus, whose famous statue, executed by Praxiteles, stood in one of her three temples there (Strabo, xiv, p. 965; Plin. Hist. Nat. xxxvi, 15; Hom. Odyss. i, 30), and was the birthplace of Etesias and other noted ancients (Pausanias, i, 1, 3). It is now a mere heap of ruins, and the modern name of the promontory is Cape Krio (Clarke's Travels, iii, 261). The place has been fully illustrated by Beaufort (Karamania, p. 81), Hamilton (Researches, ii, 39), and Texiar (Asie Mineure); see also Leake (Northern Greece, ii, 177; Asia Minor, p. 226), with the Drawings in the Ionian Antiquities, published by the Dilettanti Society, and the English Admiralty Charts, Nos. 1533, 1604.

Coin of Cnidus.

Coadjutor, in the churches of Rome and England, an assistant, appointed by competent authority, to any bishop, dignitary of a cathedral, or incumbent who is disabled by age or infirmity from the personal discharge of his duties. Such coadjutor may be either permanent or temporary, and in the former case may be appointed either with or without the right of succession. In the 3d century Bishop Narcissus, of Jerusalem, received as coadjutor Alexander of Cappadocia, and in the 4th century St. Augustine was appointed coadjutor of Valerius of Hippo. The first instance of the bishops of Rome having claimed any influence upon the appointment of coadjutors is found in a letter from Pope Zacharias to St. Boniface, in which permission is given to the latter to consecrate a coadjutor. The provincial councils, however, continued to claim this right, until in 1298 Boniface VIII reserved it as a causa major for the papal chair. The laws of the Church of Rome strictly forbade the appointment of coadjutors with the right of succession. The Council of Trent forbade it absolutely, with regard to lower benefices, but in the case of bishops and superiors of monasteries provided that, from important reasons, the popes might make an exception. The popes, however, disregarded this law, as well as so many others given by the councils, and appointed coadjutors for lower offices no less than for episcopal sees. See Wetzer u. Welte, Kirchen-Lex. ii, 646; Herzog, Real-Encyklopädie, ii, 739; Eden, Theol. Dictionary, s. v.

Coal (Sept. and N.T. ἄνθραξ) is a translation usually of one or the other of two Heb. words, viz., גַּחֶלֶת (gache'leth, literally a kindling, pruina), which signifies an ignited or live coal, and is of frequent occurrence (2 Sam. xiv, 7; xxii, 9; Job xl, 21; Psa. xviii, 8; cxx, 4; Isa. xliv, 19; xlvii, 14; Ezek. xxiv, 11), often with the emphatic addition of "burning" or of "fire" (Lev. xvi, 12; 2 Sam. xxii, 13; Psa. xviii, 12, 13; cxl, 10; Prov. vi, 28; xxv, 22; xxvi, 21; Ezek. ii, 13; x, 2), and פֶּחָם (pecham', literally black, carbo), which properly signifies a coal quenched and not reignited, or charcoal (Prov. xxvi, 21, where the distinction between this and the former term is clearly made, "as coals [pecham] are to burning coals [gacheleth]"), and hence an ignited coal (Isa. xliv, 12; liv, 16). See FUEL. Two other Heb. terms (erroneously) rendered "coal" are רִצְפָּה (ritspah', 'live coal," Isa. vi, 6, literally a pavement, as elsewhere rendered), which appears to have been a hot stone used for baking upon; רֶשֶׁף (re'sheph), properly flames (to which jealousy is compared, Cant. viii, 6), and hence pestilential fever (Hab. iii, 5; "burning heat," Deut. xxii, 24; elsewhere a "spark," Job v, 7; "thunderbolt," Psa. lxxviii, 48); and רְצָפִים (re'tseph, spoken of a cake "baken on the coals"), which appears to be cognate to both the preceding words and to combine their meaning, and may thus designate (as explained by the Rabbins a coal, Sept. ἐγκρυφία, Vulg. subcinericus) a loaf baked among the embers. See BREAD. In Lam. iv, 8, "their visage is blacker than a coal," the word is שְׁחוֹר (shechor'), which simply means blackness, as in the margin. In the New Testament, the "fire of coals" (ἀνθρακία, John xviii, 18) evidently means a mass of live charcoal, used in a chafing-dish for warming in the East, and so explained by Suidas and parallel instances in the Apocrypha (Ecclus. viii, 10; xi, 32). The substance indicated in all the foregoing passages is doubtless charcoal, although anthracite or bituminous coal has been found in Palestine in modern times (see Browning's Report; also Elliot, ii, 257). See MINERAL.

"In 2 Sam. xxii, 9, 13, 'coals of fire' are put metaphorically for the lightnings proceeding from God (Psa. xviii, 8, 12, 13; cxl, 10). In Prov. xxv, 22, we have the proverbial expression 'Thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head,' which has been adopted by Paul in Rom. xii, 20, and by which is metaphorically expressed the burning shame and confusion which men must feel when their evil is requited by good. (See the essays on this text by Heinrich [Lugd. B. 1716], Wähner [Gott. 1740].) In like manner, the Arabs speak of coals of the heart, fire of the liver, to denote burning care, anxiety, remorse, and shame (Gesen. Thesaur. Heb. p. 280). In Psa. cxx, 4, 'coals'=burning brands of wood (not 'juniper,' but broom), to which the false tongue is compared (James iii, 6). In 2 Sam. xiv, 7, the quenching of the live coal is used to indicate the threatened destruction of the single remaining branch of the family of the widow of Tekoah suborned by Joab; just as Lucian (Tim. § 3) uses the word ζώπυρον in the same connection" (Smith, s. v.). See FIRE.

Coast, an inaccurate rendering in the A. V. of various terms (usually גְּבוּל, חֶבֶל, etc., Gr. ὅριον) signifying border (q. v.), boundary, or extremity, except in the expression "sea-coast" (חוֹף, choph, Ezek. xxv, 16; παράλιος, Luke vi, 17; παραθαλάσσιος, Matt. ix, 13). See SEA.

Cone, SPENCER H., D.D., an eminent Baptist minister, was born in Princeton, N. J., April 30, 1785. His early education was carefully conducted, and at twelve years of age he entered Princeton College. Two years after, through his father's failure in business, he was compelled to leave college, and devoted himself to teaching, first in Princeton, then in Burlington, and finally (under Dr. Abercrombie) in Philadelphia. Here he began to study law; but his fine powers of elocution led him in 1805 to become an actor. He "trod the boards" with distinction for eight years, and then was suddenly converted, and was baptized by immersion Feb. 4, 1814. Obtaining a government clerkship in Washington, he removed thither, and began to preach within a year after his baptism. In 1815-16 he was chaplain to Congress, and immediately became pastor of a Baptist church at Alexandria, D. C. In 1823 he accepted a call from the Oliver Street Baptist Church, New York, where he remained until 1841, when he became pastor of the First Baptist Church, which built a new edifice in Broome Street. In this charge he remained until his death, Aug. 28, 1855. Dr. Cone's career as a preacher was very brilliant. He spoke with great ease, with a rich, sonorous voice, and very appropriate and expressive gestures. In doctrine he was a Calvinist, and a strenuous advocate of Baptist views, but yet courteous and charitable to all Christians. His preaching and pastoral labor exhausted but a small part of his activities. He took a deep interest in missions, was a member of the Baptist Board, and was president of the Convention from 1832 to 1841. He did his utmost to avert the disruption of the Convention in 1845 through the slavery disputes. He was also an officer of the Baptist Home Missionary Society from its beginning in 1832 to 1855. For many years he was active in the service of the American Bible Society, but on the formation of the Baptist (American and Foreign) Bible Society in 1836, which he aided greatly in organizing, he was made its president. On the refusal of this society to embark in the enterprise of "Bible Revision," so called, he seceded from it in order to form the American Bible Union, one of the chief objects of which was to substitute "immerse" for "baptize" in the versions of Scripture.—Sprague, Annals, vi, 656.

Coney (שָׁפָן, shaphan'; Sept. χοιρογρύλλιος), an animal joined in Lev. xi, 5, and Deut. xiv, 7, with the hare, and described as chewing the cud; in Psa. civ, 18, it is spoken of as an inhabitant of the mountains and rocks, and in Prov. xxx, 26, it is represented as a feeble, but gregarious and cunning animal. These descriptions some think agree best with the different species of the jerboa, the Mus jaculus of Linnæus. It is on the authority of Rabbinical writers that the word has by our translators been rendered "coney," or rabbit, which cannot be sustained, as the rabbit is not an Asiatic animal, and does not seek a rocky habitation, which is the leading characteristic by which the shaphan is distinguished. "The animal is, in truth, as Bruce justly indicated, the same as the Ashkoko of Abyssinia, or Daman of Syria, the Wabber of the Arabs, and in scientific zoology is one of the small genus Hyrax, distinguished by the specific name of Syrian (Syriacus). This animal has been described by travellers as a ruminant, but this is an error. The number, shape, and structure of the teeth are totally different (as is true also of the hare); nor is the jawbone articulated so as to admit freely of a similar action; finally, the internal structure, as well as the whole osteology, represents that of a rhinoceros in miniature, and has no appearance of the complicated fourfold stomachs of ruminants; therefore the hyrax is neither a rodent like hares and rabbits, nor a ruminant, but is anomalous, and most nearly allied to the great pachyderms of systematic zoology. It may be that the peculiar structure of their anterior teeth is convenient for stripping off the seeds of grasses and tritica, and that these, in part retained in the mouth, cause a practice of working the jaws, which, to common observers, may appear to be chewing the cud. In hares and rats a similar appearance is produced by a particular friction of the incisors or nippers, which, growing with great rapidity, would soon extend beyond a serviceable length if they were not kept to their proper size by constant gnawing, and by working the cutting edges against each other. This action, observed in the motion of the lips of most rodents when in a state of rest, caused the belief of rumination in the hare, though, like the hyrax, all rodentia are equally unprovided with the several stomachs, and want the muscular apparatus necessary to force the food back into the mouth for remastication at pleasure, which constitute the leading peculiarities of the anatomical structure of the ruminantia. But they may possess, in common with pachydermata, like the horse and hog, the peculiar articulation and form of jaws which give them the power of grinding their food, and laminated teeth fitted for the purpose. Externally the hyrax is somewhat of the size, form, and brownish color of a rabbit, and it has short, round ears, sufficiently like for inexact observers to mistake the one for the other. The hyrax is of clumsier structure than the rabbit, without tail, having long bristly hairs scattered through the general fur; the feet are naked below, and all the nails are flat and rounded, save those on each inner toe of the hind feet, which are long and awl-shaped; therefore the species cannot dig, and is by nature intended to reside, not, like rabbits, in burrows, but in the clefts of rocks. This character is correctly applied to the shaphan by David" (Kitto). The total length of the animal as it sits is about one foot. It presents at first sight the idea of a rat rather than any other creature. The color is gray, mixed with reddish-brown, and the belly white. They do not appear to have any cry, nor do they stand upright in walking, but seem to steal along as if in fear, advancing a few steps at a time, and then pausing. "Their timid, gregarious habits, and the tenderness of their paws, make them truly 'the wise and feeble folk' of Solomon, for the genus lives in colonies in the crevices of stony places in Syria, Palestine, Arabia, Eastern Egypt, Abyssinia, and even at the Cape of Good Hope, where one or two additional species exist. In every locality they are quiet, gentle creatures, loving to bask in the sun, never stirring far from their diet among the Jews, the art of cooking was not carried to any perfection; and, owing to the difficulty of preserving it from putrefaction, few animals (other than sacrifices) were slaughtered except for purposes of hospitality or festivity. The proceedings on such occasions appear to have been as follow: On the arrival of a guest, the animal, either a kid, lamb, or calf, was killed (Gen. xviii, 7; Luke xv, 23), its throat being cut so that the blood might be poured out (Lev. vii, 26); it was then flayed, and was ready either for roasting (צָלָה) or boiling (בָּשַׁל); in the former case the animal was preserved entire (Exod. xii, 46), and roasted either over a fire (Exod. xii, 8) of wood (Isa. xliv, 16), or perhaps, as the mention of fire implies another method, in an oven, consisting simply of a hole dug in the earth, well heated, and covered up (Burckhardt, Notes on Bedouins, i, 240). The Paschal lamb was roasted by the first of these methods (Exod. xii, 8, 9; 2 Chron. xxxv, 13). Boiling, however, was the more usual method of cooking, both in the case of sacrifices, other than the Paschal lamb (Lev. viii, 31), and for domestic purposes (Exod. xvi, 23), so much so that בָּשַׁל, bashal', to cook, generally included even roasting (Deut. xvi, 7). In this case the animal was cut up, the right shoulder being first taken off (hence the priest's joint, Lev. vii, 32), and the other joints in succession; the flesh was separated from the bones and minced, and the bones themselves were broken up (Micah iii, 3); the whole mass was then thrown into a caldron (Ezek. xxiv, 4, 5) filled with water (Exod. xii, 9), or, as we may infer from Exod. xxiii, 19, occasionally with milk, as is still usual among the Arabs (Burckhardt, Notes, i, 63), the prohibition 'not to seethe a kid in his mother's milk' having reference apparently to some heathen practice connected with the offering of the first-fruits (Exod. l. c.; xxxiv, 26), which rendered the kid so prepared unclean food (Deut. xiv, 21). No cooking was allowed the Jews on the Sabbath (Exod. xxxv, 3). See FIRE. The materials for making coals were grass and cow-dung. See FUEL. The caldron was boiled over a wood fire (Ezek. xxiv, 10); the scum which rose to the surface was from time to time removed, otherwise the meat would turn out loathsome (6); salt or spices were thrown in to season it (10); and when sufficiently boiled, the meat and the broth (מָרָק; Sept. ζωμός; Vulg. jus) were served up separately (Judg. vi, 19), the broth being used with unleavened bread, and butter (Gen. xviii, 8) as a sauce for dipping morsels of bread into (Burckhardt, Notes, i, 63). Sometimes the meat was so highly spiced that its flavor could hardly be distinguished: such dishes were called מְטֻעָמִים, matammim' (Gen. xxvii, 4; Prov. xxiii, 3). There is a striking similarity in the culinary operations of the Hebrews and Egyptians (Wilkinson's Anc. Egypt. ii, 374 sq.). Vegetables were usually boiled, and served up as pottage (Gen. xxv, 29; 2 Kings iv, 38). Fish was also cooked (Luke xxiv, 42), probably broiled. The cooking was in early times performed by the mistress of the household (Gen. xviii, 6); professional cooks were afterwards employed (1 Sam. viii, 13; ix, 23). The utensils required were: כִּירַיִם, kira'yim (Sept. χυτρόποδες; Vulg. chytropodes), a cooking range, having places for two or more pots, probably of earthenware (Lev. xi, 35); כִּיּוֹר, kiyor' (λέβης, lebes), a caldron (1 Sam. ii, 14); מַזְלֵג, mazleg' (κρεάγρα; fuscinula), a large fork or flesh-hook; סִיר (λέβης; olla), a wide, open metal vessel, resembling a fish-kettle, adapted to be used as a wash-pot (Psa. lx, 8) or to eat from (Exod. xvi, 3); פָּרוּר, parur'; דּוּד, dud; קַלַּחַת, kallach'ath, pots probably of earthenware and high, but how differing from each other does not appear; and, lastly, צַלַּחַת, tsallach'ath, or צְלוֹחִית, tselochith', dishes (2 Kings ii, 20; xxi, 13; Prov. xix, 24; A. V. 'bosom')."—Smith, s. v. The רִצְפָּה, re'tseph (fem. רִצָּף), was, according to Gesenius, a hot stone, used for baking on; or, as Winer thinks (in Simonis Lex. p. 926), for cooking milk or broth, by throwing it into the vessel; but

Fûrst regards it as simply meaning live embers. See VICTUALS.

Cook, Charles, D.D., one of the founders of French Methodism, was born in London, May 31, 1787. Skeptical in youth, he was converted at twenty-one, chiefly under the instruction of the Rev. Jacob Stanley. After spending a few years as tutor in a seminary, he entered the ministry of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in 1817. In 1818 he was sent to France, and commenced his ministry at Caen, in Normandy. He soon acquired a good French style, both in writing and speaking, and became eminently popular and useful as an evangelist. The Sunday-school Society and Bible Society were originated chiefly through the impulse given by him. In numerous evangelical journeys, especially in the south of France, he preached in the Reformed churches with great acceptance, and revivals of religion followed his labors. His administrative talent was very great. Merle d'Aubigné, in a letter to M. Gallienne, president of the French Conference, says that Cook "was to France, Switzerland, and Sardinia what Wesley was in his day to England." He died Feb. 21, 1858.—J. P. Cook, Vie de Charles Cook (Paris, 1862); Stevens, History of Methodism.

Cook, Russell S., an American Congregational clergyman, was born in New Marlborough, Mass., March 6, 1811. After being for a short time in a lawyer's office, he studied theology at the Theological Seminary at Auburn. In 1836 he was ordained pastor of the Congregational church in Lanesboro, Mass. In 1839 he was elected secretary of the American Tract Society, in which office he remained until 1856, when failing health obliged him to retire. He was a regular contributor to the American Messenger, the monthly organ of the society; and to his labor the development of the colportage system was greatly due. After a visit to Europe in 1856, he in 1857 became the secretary of the Sabbath Committee in New York, and in 1863 he added to his work on this committee several weeks of exhausting labor in organizing and energizing the Christian Commission in New York. He died at Pleasant Valley, near Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Sept. 4, 1864.—See Annual American Cyclop. for 1864, p. 354.

Cook, Valentine, a Methodist Episcopal minister. He was born in Pennsylvania (date wanting), of pious and cultivated parents; removed early to Western Virginia; was converted in youth; entered Cokesbury College while a boy, where he was one of the four boys placed on the charity foundation, and, after a partial course in 1787, entered the itinerant ministry in 1788. In 1794–7 he was presiding elder on Philadelphia and Pittsburg districts; and in 1798, missionary to Kentucky. In 1799 he took charge of Bethel Seminary, the second Methodist literary institution in America; afterwards was some time principal of Harrodsburg Academy, and finally removed to a farm near Russelville, Logan Co., Ky., where he resided until his death. In his youth he was very studious and serious, and became in subsequent life a good classical scholar. He had great reputation as an eloquent and effective minister. Many were converted by his preaching, and his influence was widely extended.—Stevenson, Life of Cook (Nashville, 1856, 12mo); Methodist Quart. Rev. April, 1859, p. 183; Geo. Peck, D.D., Early Methodism (N. Y. 1860, 12mo, p. 71, 72, 86); Sprague, Annals, vii, 151; Summers, Biograph. Sketches, p. 183.

Cooke, PARSONS, D.D., an American Congregational minister, was born in Hadley, Mass., in 1800. He was educated at Williams College, where he graduated in 1821. In 1826 he was ordained as pastor of the Congregational church in Ware, Mass. After continuing in this pastorate for ten or eleven years, he became pastor of the First Congregational church in Lynn, Mass., with which he remained until his death, a period of twenty-eight years. While pastor at Lynn he established the "New England Puritan," which, after some time, was united with the "Recorder," under the name of the "Puritan Recorder," which name was later changed to that of the "Boston Recorder," of which Mr. Cooke became, and remained until his death, the senior editor. In 1829 he published a sermon on The Exclusiveness of Unitarianism, and afterwards several other controversial writings. He died at Lynn, Feb. 12, 1864.—See Annual American Cyclop. for 1864, p. 355.

Cookman, GEORGE G., one of the most distinguished orators of the American pulpit, was born in 1800, at Hull, England. His father, a man of wealth and position, was a Wesleyan local preacher, and gave his children a thorough religious training and a careful academical education. In early youth Cookman gave promise of his powers in oratory by speeches at Sunday-school anniversaries, etc., which excited extraordinary interest. When about twenty-one years old he visited America on business for his father, and while at Schenectady, N. Y., he began his labors as a local preacher. In 1821 he returned to Hull, and entered into business with his father, exercising his talents meanwhile zealously in the Wesleyan local ministry. He continued in his father's firm during four years, but with a restless spirit; and finally, deciding to enter the ministry in America, he took passage for Philadelphia in 1825. After laboring a few months in that city as a local preacher, he was received into the Philadelphia Conference in 1826. He continued in the itinerant ranks, without intermission, the remainder of his life, laboring with indomitable energy, and constantly increasing ability and success, in various parts of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. Cookman was slight, but sinewy in person, and capable of great endurance. His arms were long, which gave a striking peculiarity to his gestures. In the act of public speaking, every nerve and muscle of his lithe frame seemed instinct with the excitement of his subject. In 1838–39 he was chaplain to the American Congress, and the Hall of Representatives at Washington never echoed more eloquent tones than during his chaplaincy to Congress. Several of his distinguished hearers, both in Congress and the executive department of the government, were awakened to a personal interest in religion by his powerful appeals. Imagination was Mr. Cookman's dominant mental faculty. It can hardly be doubted that, had he devoted himself to the production of some work in this rare and difficult department of literature, he might have become a worthy disciple of the glorious old dreamer of Bedford Jail. On the 11th of March, 1841, he embarked in the ill-fated steamer President for a visit to England, and was never heard of more. Few of his sermons and speeches have been published. A small volume of Speeches (N. Y. 1841, 18mo) contains those referred to above and some others. It is to be hoped that a suitable memoir of this distinguished man will yet be given to the world.—National Magazine, Aug. 1855; Methodist Quart. Review, July, 1852; Sprague, Annals, vii, 711.

Cooper, Ezekiel, an early and celebrated Methodist preacher, born in Caroline County, Md., Feb. 22, 1763. He joined the Conference in 1785; labored from Boston to Baltimore as a travelling preacher for many years, and was editor and general agent of the Book Concern from 1799 to 1804. His abilities for this office were soon shown to be of the highest order. He gave to the "Book Concern" an impulse and organization which has rendered it the largest publishing establishment in the New World. After managing its interests with admirable success for six years, during which its capital stock had risen from almost nothing to forty-five thousand dollars, he resumed his itinerant labors, and continued them in Brooklyn, New York city, Wilmington, Del., Baltimore, etc., for eight years, when he located. He remained in the latter relation during eight years, when he re-entered the travelling ministry, but was soon afterwards placed on the supernumerary list in the Philadelphia Conference. He continued, however, for many years to perform extensive service, visiting the churches, and part of the time superintending a district. During the latter years of his life he resided in Philadelphia, where he died in 1847. He was distinguished for pulpit eloquence, logical ability, and especially for his multifarious knowledge, which obtained for him among his brethren the title of "the Walking Encyclopædia." He published a "Funeral Sermon" on Rev. John Dickens, and "the Substance of a Funeral Discourse on Rev. Francis Asbury," etc., Philad. 1819. The latter was a 32mo volume of 230 pages (Stevens, Hist. of Meth. Epis. Church, vol. iii; Sprague, Annals, vii, 108; Minutes of Conferences, iv, 104).

Cooper, Samuel, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in Boston, March 28, 1725. He graduated at Harvard in 1743, and was chosen collegiate pastor with Dr. Colman in the Brattle-street Church, Dec. 31, 1744. He was ordained pastor May 21, 1746, and died Dec. 23, 1783. He was made D.D. by the University of Edinburgh in 1767. Dr. Cooper published a few occasional sermons, and wrote contributions for the Boston Gazette and Independent Ledger. He was elected president of Harvard in 1774, but did not accept.—Sprague, Annals, i, 440.

Cooper, Samuel C., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Baltimore 1799, converted in Ohio 1818, acted efficiently as exhorter and local preacher for some years, and entered the itinerancy in 1827. He died at Greencastle, Ind., July, 1856. He filled the positions of pastor, presiding elder, and agent for the Asbury University with excellent success. He was twice delegate to the General Conference, and his attendance at the Conference of 1856 was his last service to the Church.—Minutes of Conferences, vi, 134.

Cooper, Thomas, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Maidstone, Eng., in 1819; emigrated to America while young; was converted at Mount Vernon, Ohio, while a boy; studied with success at the Norwalk seminary under Dr. Thomson, and entered the itinerancy in 1842. As an agent of the Ohio Wesleyan University, a seamen's missionary, and in the regular pastoral work, he was very able and useful, until his sudden death by cholera, July, 1849.—Thomson, Biographical Sketches, p. 191.

Cooper, William, a Congregational minister, was a native of Boston, born in 1694, and graduated at Harvard 1712. He commenced preaching in 1715, and was ordained collegiate pastor of the Brattle-street Church, May 23, 1716. He was elected president of Harvard in 1737, but declined the honor. He died Dec. 12, 1743. Mr. Cooper published A Tract defending Inoculation for the Small-pox (1721); The Doctrine of Predestination unto Life vindicated in four Sermons (1740); and several occasional discourses.—Sprague, Annals, i, 288.

Co'ös [or rather Cos, as it is usually written] (Κῶς, contracted for Κόως, Anglicized "Coos" only in Acts xxi, 1), a small island (about 80 stadia in circumference, Strabo x, 488), one of the Sporades, in the Ægæan Sea, near the coast of Caria in Asia Minor, and almost between the promontories on which the cities Cnidus and Halicarnassus were situated (Plin. v, 36). Its more ancient names were Cea, Staphylus, Nymphæa, and Meropis, of which the last was the most common (Thucyd. viii, 41). Homer mentions it as a populous settlement (Il. ii, 184; xiv, 255), no doubt of Dorian origin. Its fertility is attested by its celebrity for wine (Plin. xv, 18; xvii, 30), its costly ointments (Athen. xv, 688), and its fabrics of a transparent texture (Horace, Od. iv, 13, 7; Tibull. ii, 4, 6). It was the birthplace of Hippocrates. "It is specified, in the edict which resulted from the communications of Simon Maccabæus with Rome, as one of the places which contained Jewish residents (1 Macc. xv, 23). Josephus, quoting Strabo, mentions that the Jews had a great amount of treasure stored there during the Mithridatic war (Ant. xiv, 7, 2). From the same source we learn that Julius Cæsar issued an edict in favor of the Jews of Cos (ib. 10, 15). Herod the Great conferred many favors on the island (Joseph. War, i, 21, 11); and an inscription in Böckh (No. 2502) associates it with Herod the Tetrarch. The apostle Paul, on the return from his third missionary journey, passed the night here, after sailing from Miletus. The next day he went on to Rhodes (Acts xxi, 1). The proximity of Cos to these two important places, and to Cnidus, and its position at the entrance to the Archipelago from the east, made it an island of considerable consequence. It was celebrated also for a temple of Æsculapius, to which a school of physicians was attached, and which was virtually, from its votive models, a museum of anatomy and pathology. The emperor Claudius bestowed upon Cos the privileges of a free state (Tac. Ann. xii, 61). The chief town (of the same name) was on the N.E., near a promontory called Scandarium, and perhaps it is to the town that reference is made in the Acts (l. c.)" (Smith). It is now called Stanco or Stanchio (a corruption of ἐς τὴν Κῶ), and presents to the view fine plantations of lemon-trees, intermixed with stately maples. Its population is about eight thousand, who mostly profess the Greek religion (Turner's Tour in the Levant, iii, 41). "There is a monograph on Cos by Küster (De Co Insula, Halle, 1833), and a very useful paper on the subject by Col. Leake (in the Trans. of the Royal Soc. of Literature, vol. i, second series). An account of the island will be found in Clarke's Travels (vol. ii, pt. i, p. 193-213,

IV. Present Condition and Ecclesiastical Statistics.—In some parts of Upper Egypt there are still villages exclusively inhabited by Copts, and in every village of moderate size is a moallim (a title given to all Copts except those of the poor class or peasants), who keeps the register of the taxes. Most of the Copts in Cairo are employed as secretaries and accountants or tradesmen. They are the chief employés in the government offices; and as merchants, goldsmiths, silversmiths, jewellers, architects, builders, and carpenters, they are generally considered more skilful than the Moslems. In the villages they are employed in agriculture, like the rest of the peasantry. Petty causes among them are judged of by their clergy and the patriarch, but appeal may be made to the cadi. They bear a hatred to other Christian denominations, and are not permitted by their Church to intermarry with them. The clergy, on the whole, are poor and ignorant. At the head of the clergy stands the patriarch of Alexandria, who resides, however, in Cairo. His jurisdiction extends also over Nubia and Abyssinia, for which latter country he has the right of consecrating the abuna (q. v.). He himself is always chosen from among the monks of the convents of St. Macarius, in the desert of Scete. It is customary for the patriarch elect to decline the dignity, and only to yield to apparent force. Besides the patriarch, there are four metropolitans (Cairo, Lower Egypt, Codus, Mounoufia) and eleven bishops. They are appointed by the patriarch, and generally chosen among laymen who are widowers. Their income consists of tithes, which they collect for themselves and for the patriarch. The priests are generally simple mechanics, and, although they are at liberty to marry, they live mostly in celibacy. The number of churches and convents is said to amount to about 150. A few years ago Tattam and Curzon discovered in some of these convents a number of the most valuable manuscripts. The population is estimated from 150,000 to 250,000, of whom about 10,000 reside in Cairo. The number of Copts who have acknowledged the authority of the pope (United Copts since 1732) is about 10,000. In 1855 the pope appointed one of their priests vicar apostolic and bishop in partibus.—Makrizii Historia Coptorum Christianorum in Ægypto, Arab. et in linguam Lat. translata, ab H. J. Wetzer (Solisbaci, 1828); Schaff, History of the Christian Church, § 145; Stanley, Eastern Church, Lect. i; Churchman's Calendar for 1867, p. 163; Evangelical Repository, July, 1867.

Cor (כֹּר, kor, properly a round vessel; Gr. κόρος), a measure both for liquids and solids, containing ten ephahs or baths (Ezek. xlv, 14), and equal to the homer (q. v.). In 1 Kings iv, 22; v, 11; 2 Chron. ii, 10; xxvii, 5; Luke xvi, 7, it is rendered indefinitely "measure" (q. v.); but in 1 Esdr. viii, 20, it is correctly Anglicized. See METROLOGY.

Corăcin (κορακῖνος, a Latinized form for κορακινῆς, from κόραξ, a raven), a kind of fish (so called probably from its black color), found, according to Josephus (War, iii, 10, 8), in the spring of Capernaum (q. v.) and in the Nile (Theophylact, Hist. vii, 17; Oribasius, Medic. Collect. ii, 58); accustomed to leap like the salmon (Pliny, xxxii, 5, 10), and called likewise the saperda (Athenæus, vii, 16) and other names (Stevens, Thes. Gr. s. v.; Reland, Pal est. p. 274).

Coral is usually understood to be denoted by the word רָאמוֹת (ramoth', literally heights, i. e. high-priced or valuable things, or from its upright growth; Sept. μετέωρα, but in Ezek. Ῥᾶμοθ), in Job xxviii, 18; Ezek. xxvii, 16; and this interpretation is not unsuitable (comp. Niebuhr, Beschr. p. 41), although the etymology is not well made out (Pareau, De immortalitatis notitiâ Job [Daventr. 1808], p. 321 sq.), and the dialects afford little support. According to the Rabbins, it means red corals. The ancient translators were evidently much perplexed to determine whether the word פְּנִינִים (peninim', literally branches; rendered "rubies," Job xxviii, 18; Prov. iii, 15; viii, 11; xx, 15; xxxi, 10; Lam. iv, 7) meant corals or pearls. This will always be doubtful; but the text in Lam. iv, 7, by describing the article as red, suggests a preference of the former. It is scarcely credible, indeed, that such a product should have circulated under two different names (if ramoth also means coral); but surely there is no difficulty in conceiving that one word may have denoted coral generally, while another may have distinguished that red coral which was the most esteemed, and the most in use for ornament (see Gesenius, Thes. Heb. p. 1113, 1249).

Branch of Coral.

Coral is a hard, cretaceous marine production, arising from the deposit of calcareous matter by a minute polypous animal, in order to form the cell or polypidom into whose hollows the tenant can wholly or partially retire. The corals thus produced are of various shapes, most usually branched like a tree. The masses are often enormous in the tropical seas, where they top the reefs and cap the submarine mountains, frequently rising to or near the surface, so as to form what are called coral islands and coral reefs (see Kitto, Pict. Bible, on Job xxviii, 18). These abound in the Red Sea (Wellsted, Trav. ii, 181; Rüppel, Abyssin. i, 140), from which, most probably, was derived the coral with which the Hebrews were acquainted; but coral is also found in the Mediterranean. The coral brought by the merchants of Syria to Tyre must have come from the Indian seas, by the Euphrates and Damascus (comp. Plin. xxxii, 2). Coral was in higher esteem formerly as a precious substance than now, probably because the means of obtaining it in a fine state were not so efficacious as those now practised. It is of different colors—white, black, red. The red was anciently, as at present, the most valued, and was worked into various ornaments (Plin. xxxii, 11; comp. Hartmann, Hebr. i, 275 sq.). For the scientific classification of corals, see the Penny Cyclopædia, s. v. Polyparia.—Kitto, s. v. The red variety is the stony skeleton of a compound zoophyte, allied to the sea-anemones of our coasts. It forms a much-branching shrub, the beautiful scarlet stone constituting the solid axis, which is covered during life by a fleshy bark, out of which protrude here and there upon the surface minute polypes with eight tentacles. It is found attached to the rocks at considerable depths, as from 20 to 120 fathoms. The demand for it has given rise to a fishery of some importance, about 180 boats being employed in it on the coast of Algeria, of which 156 fish in the neighborhood of Bona and Calla, obtaining 36,000 kilogrammes (about 720[illegible]) of coral; and this, selling at the rate of [illegible]s per kilogramme, produces a return of $[illegible]. The mode by which it is obtained is the s[illegible]s always prevailed, and is rude and w[illegible] great cross of wood loaded with stone[illegible]g at the end of each arm a sort of net [illegible] partly untwisted, is lowered from a [illegible]gged over the bottom. The branch[illegible]rals are entangled in this apparatus, and, as the boat moves on, are torn off; at intervals it is pulled up, and the produce secured. Of course a great deal must be broken off which is not secured, but yet it is a profitable employment. A boat manned by nine or ten hands has been known to bring in 80 or 100 kilogrammes in a day, yielding $100 or $125; but such success is rare. The fishery is prosecuted from the 1st of April to the end of September, during which there may be on the average about 100 days in which the fishermen can work (Milne Edwards, Hist. des Corallines).—Fairbairn, s. v. See GEM.

Cor'ban (κορβᾶν, for קָרְבָּן, korban', an offering), a Hebrew word (occurring frequently in the original of the O. T., but only in Lev. and Numb., except in Ezek. xx, 28; xl, 43) employed in the Hellenistic Greek, just as the corresponding Greek word δῶρον was employed in the Rabbinical Hebrew (Buxtorf, Lex. Rab. col. 579) to designate an oblation of any kind to God, whether bloody or bloodless, but particularly in fulfilment of a vow (Jahn, Bibl. Arch. v, § 392, 394). It occurs only once in the New Testament (Mark vii, 11), where it is explained (as also by Josephus, Ant. iv, 4, 4; contra Ap. i, 22) by the word "gift." Money, lands, and houses, which had been made the subject of this vow, became the property of the tabernacle or the Temple, except that the land might be redeemed before the year of Jubilee (Lev. xxvii, 1-24). Among other false doctrines taught by the Pharisees, who were the keepers of the sacred treasury (κορβανᾶς, from corban, Matt. xxvii, 6), was this, that as soon as a person had pronounced to his father or mother this form of consecration or offering, "Be it (or, It is) corban [i. e. devoted] whatever of mine shall profit thee" (קָרְבָּן שֶׁאֲנִי נֶהֱנֶה לָךְ), he thereby consecrated all he had spoken of to God, and must not thenceforth do anything for his indigent parents if they solicited support from him. Therefore our Lord reproaches them with having destroyed by their tradition not only that commandment of the Law which enjoins children to honor their father and mother, but also another divine precept, which, under the severest penalty, forbade that kind of dishonor which consists in contumelious words (Mark vii, 9; x, 13). They, however, proceeded even further than this unnatural gloss; for though the son did not give, or even mean to give, his property to the Temple, yet, if he afterwards should repent of his rashness, and wish to supply his parents with anything, what he had formerly said precluded the possibility of doing so, for, according to the Pharisaic doctrine, the sacred treasury had a claim upon him in preference to his parents, although he was perfectly at liberty to keep it to himself (see Lightfoot, Hor. Heb., and Grotius, Annot., on Matt. xv, 5). The law laid down rules for vows, 1. affirmative; 2. negative. By the former, persons, animals, and property might be devoted to God, but, with certain limitations, they were redeemable by money payments. By the latter, persons interdicted themselves, or were interdicted by their parents, from the use of certain things lawful in themselves, as wine, either for a limited or an unlimited period (Lev. xxvii; Num. xxx; Judg. xiii, 7; Jer. xxxv; comp. Josephus, Ant. iv, 4, 4; War, ii, 15, 1; see Acts xviii, 18; xxi, 23, 24). See VOW. Upon these rules the traditionists enlarged, and laid down that a man might interdict himself by vow, not only from using for himself, but from giving to another, or receiving from him some particular object, whether of food or any other kind whatsoever. The thing thus interdicted was considered as corban, and the form of interdiction was virtually to this effect: "I forbid myself to touch or be concerned in any way with the thing forbidden, as if it were devoted by law," i. e. "let it be corban." (The exact formula, קוֹנָם שֶׁאֲנִי נֶהֱנֶה לָךְ, "[that] has been given [to God], which [in respect to] me is beneficial to thee," of which the Evangelist's ὃ ἐὰν ἐξ ἐμοῦ ὠφεληθῇς seems a strict rendering, is cited by Schöttgen, Hor. Hebr. i, 138, from the Mishna, Nedarim, fol. 24, 1.) So far did they carry the principle that they even held as binding the incomplete exclamations of anger, and called them יָדוֹת, handles. A person might thus exempt himself from assisting or receiving assistance from some particular person or persons, as parents in distress; and, in short, from any inconvenient obligation under plea of corban, though by a legal fiction he was allowed to suspend the restriction in certain cases (Surenhusius, Mischna, de Votis, i, 4; ii, 2). It was with practices of this sort that our Lord found fault (Matt. xv, 5; Mark vii, 11), as annulling the spirit of the law. See OFFERING.

Theophrastus, quoted by Josephus (Ap. i, 22), notices the system, miscalling it a Phœnician custom, but in naming the word corban identifies it with Judaism. Josephus (War, ii, 9, 4) calls the treasury in which offerings for the Temple or its services were deposited, κορβανᾶς, corbanas; and Matthew (xxvii, 6) uses the same word to signify the treasury, saying that the chief priests did not think it lawful to put the money of Judas into it (εἰς τὸν κορβανᾶν) (Bingham, Orig. Eccl. v, 4, 2). Origen's account of the corban system is that children sometimes refused assistance to parents on the ground that they had already contributed to the poor fund, from which they alleged their parents might be relieved. In the early Church, oblations were presented monthly, and they were always voluntarily placed in the treasury. Baronius thinks this treasury was called corban, because Cyprian uses the word when he speaks of the offerings of the people, rebuking a rich matron for coming to celebrate the Eucharist without any regard to the corban. See ALMS.

Cor'bè (Χορβέ, Vulg. Chorba), one of the captive Jews whose "sons" (to the number of 705) are stated to have returned from Babylon (1 Esdr. v, 12); apparently the ZACCAI (q. v.) of the Hebrew lists (Ezra ii, 9; Neh. vii, 14).

Corbel (Fr. corbeille, a basket), in Gothic architecture a projecting stone or timber to bear the superincumbent weight, usually of some architectural member of the structure, as the ribs or groins of an arch.

on board an American vessel, which ran aground in one of the rivers of Corea, when the natives, considering the people on board as pirates and enemies, captured and beheaded them.—Wetzer u. Welte, Kirchen-Lex. xii, 254 sq.; Annual American Cyclop. for 1866, p. 258; The Christian Year-book (Lond. 1867, p. 308).

Corĕæ (Κορέαι), a fortified place mentioned by Josephus (Ant. xiv, 3, 4) as lying on the northern border of Judæa, on the route of Pompey to Jerusalem (War, i, 6, 5), and also visited by Vespasian, who marched in one day thither from Neapolis, and the next reached Jericho (War, iv, 8, 1). Near this place (πρός) was situated the fortress Alexandrium (q. v.), where the princes of Alexander Jannæus's family were mostly buried, and whither Herod carried the remains of his sons Alexander and Aristobulus (who were maternally of that family), after they had been put to death at Sebaste (Joseph. Ant. xiii, 24; xiv, 6, 10, 27; xvi, 2, et ult.). The situation of Coreæ, which determines that of the castle, is not known; but Dr. Robinson (Bib. Researches, iii, 83) conjectures that he may have found it in the modern Kuriyet, which is about eight miles S. by E. from Nablous (Shechem), and half an hour N. by E. of Shiloh (Ritter, Erdk. xv, 455). It is small, with no very definite traces of antiquity (Wolcott, in the Bibliotheca Sacra, 1843, p. 72). The similarity of name to that of Beth-car (Χόρραια, Josephus, Ant. vi, 22) seems to be accidental. See Ebenezer.

Coreăthè (Κωρεάθη), an episcopal village of Trachonitis (Reland, Palest. p. 218) mentioned in the early Church notices (S. Paulo, Geogr. Sac. p. 51); probably the modern Kiratah (Ritter, Erdk. xv, 866), on the southern edge of the Lejah (Porter, ii, 216).

Coriander (גַּד, gad, from the root גָּדַד, to make an incision, referring to the furrows in the seed). The Syriac, Chaldee, and Arabic, with the Sept. and Vulg., render this word coriander (Gesenius, Thesaur. Heb. p. 264), as does our version in Exod. xvi, 13; Num. xi, 7, the only passages where it occurs, and in both which the appearance of manna is compared to that of its seeds as to form, and in the former passage as to color also. See Manna. According to Dioscorides also (iii, 64) the ancient Carthaginian name for coriander was goid (γοιδ), evidently kindred with the Hebrew gad. Celsius states (Hierob. ii, 78 sq.) that the coriander is frequently mentioned in the Talmud (where it is called גַּסְבָּר, kasbar', or כּוּסְבָּר, kusbar'). It was known to and used medicinally by Hippocrates: it is mentioned by Theophrastus, as well as Dioscorides, under the name of κόριον or κοριαννον; and the Arabs, in their works on Materia Medica, give korion as the Greek synonym of coriander, which they call kuzecreh, the Persians kushneez, and the natives of India (compare Pliny, xx, 82) dhunya. It is known throughout all these countries, in all of which it is cultivated, being universally employed as a grateful spice, and as one of the ingredients of currie-powder (see Büsching, Wöchentl. Nachr. 1775, p. 42; Rauwolff, Reise, p. 94; Gmelin, Reise durch Russl. iii, 282). It is also found in Egypt (Prosp. Alpin. Res. Æg. ii, 9, p. 156). It is now very common in the south of Europe, and also in England, being cultivated, especially in Essex, on account of its seeds, which are required by confectioners, druggists, and distillers in large quantities; in gardens it is reared on account of its leaves, which are used in soups and salads (see Pereira's Materia Medica). The coriander is the Coriandrum sativum of botanists, an umbelliferous plant, with a round tall stalk. The flowers are small and pale pink, the leaves are much divided (especially the upper ones) and smooth. The fruit, commonly called seeds, is globular, grayish-colored, about the size of peppercorn, having its surface marked with fine striæ. Both its taste and smell are agreeable, depending on the presence of a volatile oil, which is separated by distillation (see Penny Cyclopædia, s. v.). See Botany.

Cor'inth (Κόρινθος, occurs Acts xviii, 1; xix, 1; 1 Cor. i, 2; 2 Cor. i, 1, 23; 2 Tim. iv, 20; "Corinthus," subscr. to Ep. to Rom.), a Grecian city, placed on the isthmus which joins Peloponnesus (now called the Morea) to the continent of Greece. A lofty rock rises above it, on which was the citadel, or the Acrocorinthus (Livy xlv, 28). It had two harbors: Cenchreæ, on the eastern side, about seventy stadia distant; and Lechæum, on the modern Gulf of Lepanto, only twelve stadia from the city (Strabo, viii, 6). Its earliest name, as given by Homer, is Ephyre (Ἐφύρη, Il. vi, 152); and mysterious legends connect it with Lycia, by means of the hero Bellerophon, to whom a plot of ground was consecrated in front of the city, close to a cypress grove (Pausan. ii, 2). Owing to the great difficulty of weathering Malea, the southern promontory of Greece, merchandise passed through Corinth from sea to sea, the city becoming an entrepôt for the goods of Asia and Italy (Strabo, viii, 6). At the same time, it commanded the traffic by land from north to south. An attempt made to dig through the isthmus was frustrated by the rocky nature of the soil; at one period, however, they had an invention for drawing galleys across from sea to sea on trucks. With such advantages of position, Corinth was very early renowned for riches, and seems to have been made by nature for the capital of Greece. The numerous colonies which she sent forth, chiefly to the west and to Sicily, gave her points of attachment in many parts; and the good will, which, as a mercantile state, she carefully maintained, made her a valuable link between the various Greek tribes. The public and foreign policy of Corinth appears to have been generally remarkable for honor and justice (Herod. and Thucyd. passim); and the Isthmian games, which were celebrated there every other year, might have been converted into a national congress, if the Corinthians had been less peaceful and more ambitious. When the Achæan league was rallying the chief powers of Southern Greece, Corinth became its military centre; and, as the spirit of freedom was active in that confederacy, they were certain, sooner or later, to give the Romans a pretence for attacking them. The fatal blow fell on Corinth (B.C. 146), when L. Mummius, by order of the Roman senate, barbarously destroyed that beautiful town (Cicero, Verr. i, 21), eminent even in Greece for painting, sculpture, and all working in metal and pottery; and, as the territory was given over to the Sicyonians (Strabo, l. c.), we must infer that the whole population was sold into slavery.

The Corinth of which we read in the New Testament was quite a new city, having been rebuilt and established as a Roman colony, and peopled with freedmen from Rome (Pausanias and Strabo, u. s.) by the dictator Cæsar a little before his assassination. Although the soil was too rocky to be fertile, and the territory very limited, Corinth again became a great and wealthy city in a short time, especially as the Roman proconsuls made it the seat of government (Acts xviii) for Southern Greece, which was now called the province of Achaia. In earlier times Corinth had been celebrated for the great wealth of its temple of Venus, which had a gainful traffic of a most dishonorable kind with the numerous merchants resident there —supplying them with harlots under the forms of religion (hence κορινθιάζεσθαι = scortari, see Schotti Adagia Gr. p. 568). The same phenomena, no doubt, reappeared in the later and Christian age. The little which is said in the New Test. seems to indicate a wealthy and luxurious community, prone to impurity of morals; nevertheless, all Greece was so contaminated that we may easily overcharge the accusation against Corinth. We find Gallio, brother of the philosopher Seneca, exercising the functions of proconsul here during the apostle Paul's first residence at Corinth, in the reign of Claudius. This residence continued for a year and six months, and the circumstances which occurred during the course of it are related at some length (Acts xviii, 1-18). The apostle had recently passed through Macedonia. He came to Corinth from Athens; shortly after his arrival Silas and Timotheus came from Macedonia and rejoined him; and about this time the two epistles to the Thessalonians were written (probably A.D. 49 and 50). It was at Corinth that the apostle first became acquainted with Aquila and Priscilla, and shortly after his departure Apollos came to this city from Ephesus (Acts xviii, 27). Corinth was a place of great mental activity, as well as of commercial and manufacturing enterprise. Its wealth was so celebrated as to be proverbial; so were the vice and profligacy of its inhabitants. The worship of Venus here was attended with shameful licentiousness. All these points are indirectly illustrated by passages in the two epistles to the Corinthians, which were written (probably A.D. 54), the first during Paul's stay at Ephesus, the second from Macedonia, shortly before the second visit to Corinth, which is briefly stated (Acts xx, 3) to have lasted three months. See CORINTHIANS (EPISTLES TO). During this visit (probably A.D. 55) the epistle to the Romans was written. From the three epistles last mentioned, compared with Acts xxiv, 17, we gather that Paul was much occupied at this time with a collection for the poor Christians at Jerusalem. It has been well observed that the great number of Latin names of persons mentioned in the epistle to the Romans is in harmony with what we know of the colonial origin of a large part of the population of Corinth. According to Philo (Opp. ii, 587), it was extensively colonized by Jews. From Acts xviii we may conclude that there were many Jewish converts in the Corinthian church, though it would appear (1 Cor. xii, 2) that the Gentiles predominated. On the other hand, it is evident from the whole tenor of both epistles that the Judaizing element was very strong at Corinth. Party spirit also was extremely prevalent, the names of Paul, Peter, and Apollos being used as the watchwords of restless factions. Among the eminent Christians who lived at Corinth were Stephanas (1 Cor. i, 16; xvi, 15, 17), Crispus (Acts xviii, 8; 1 Cor. i, 14), Caius (Rom. xvi, 23; 1 Cor. i, 14), and Erastus (Rom. xvi, 23; 2 Tim. iv, 20). The epistle of Clement to the Corinthians is among the most interesting of the post-apostolic writings. The Corinthian church is remarkable in the epistles of Paul by the variety of its spiritual gifts, that seem for the time to have eclipsed or superseded the office of the elder or bishop, which in most churches became from the beginning so prominent. Very soon, however, this peculiarity was lost, and the bishops of Corinth take a place co-ordinate to those of other capital cities. One of them, Dionysius, appears to have exercised great influence over many and distant churches in the latter part of the second century (Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. iv, 23). In the year 268 of the Christian era the city was burned by the Goths, and in 525 it was destroyed by an earthquake. During the Middle Ages Corinth shared the fate of many of the cities of Greece in being wrested from the emperors of Constantinople and possessed by a succession of adventurers, and at length formed a part of the duchy of Athens, ruled first by the French, then by the Arragonese kings of Sicily, and finally by the Accaioli, a family of Florence, from whom it was taken by Mohammed II in 1460. During a war between the Venetians and the Turks, it was captured by the former in 1687, but was recovered by the Turks in 1715, and held by them until the period of the Greek revolution, when it became the seat of the new government, although taken and retaken more than once during the war. Corinth is still an episcopal see. The cathedral church of St. Nicholas, "a very mean place for such an ecclesiastical dignity," used in Turkish times to be in the Acrocorinthus. The city has now shrunk to a wretched village, on the old site, and bearing the old name, which, however, is often corrupted into Gortho (see Hassel, Handbuch der neuest Erdbeschreib. III, i, 673 sq.).

Pausanias, in describing the antiquities of Corinth as they existed in his day, distinguishes clearly between those which belonged to the old Greek city and those which were of Roman origin. Two relics of Roman work are still to be seen, one a heap of brick-work which may have been part of the baths erected by Hadrian, the other the remains of an amphitheatre after the plunge. But the gannet (solan goose) rarely comes further south than the British Channel, and does not appear to have been noticed in the Mediterranean. It is true that several other marine birds of the North frequent the Levant, but none of them can entirely claim Aristotle and Oppian's characters of "cataractes;" for, though the wide throat and rather large head of the dwarf cormorant may be adduced, that bird exceeds in stature the required size of a small hawk, and fishes, it may be repeated, swimming and diving, not by darting down on the wing, and is not sufficiently numerous or important to have required the attention of the sacred legislator.

Thus reduced to make a choice where the objections are less and the probabilities stronger, we conclude the shalak to have been a species of "tern," considered to be identical with the Sterna Caspica, so called because it is found about the Caspian Sea; but it is equally common to the Polar, Baltic, and Black Seas, and, if truly the same, is not only abundant for several months in the year on the coast of Palestine, but frequents the lakes and pools far inland, flying across the deserts to the Euphrates, and to the Persian and Red Seas, and proceeding up the Nile. It is the largest of the tern or sea-swallow genus, being about the weight of a pigeon, and near two feet in length, having a large black-naped head, powerful, pointed crimson bill, a white and grey body, with forked tail, and wings greatly exceeding the tips of the tail; the feet are very small, weak, and but slightly webbed, so that it swims perhaps only accidentally, but with sufficient power on land to spring up and to rise from level ground. It flies with immense velocity, darting along the surface of the sea to snap at mollusca or small fishes, or wheeling through the air in pursuit of insects; and in calm weather, after rising to a great height, it drops perpendicularly down to near the surface of the water, but never alights except on land; and it is at all times disposed to utter a kind of laughing scream. This tern nestles in high cliffs, sometimes at a very considerable distance from the sea. (See the Penny Cyclopædia, s. v. Tern.)—Kitto, s. v. Salach.

2. קָאַת (kaath'), rendered "cormorant" in our version in Isa. xxxiv, 11; Zeph. ii, 14, is elsewhere translated "PELICAN," q. v.

Greater Cormorant (Phalacrocorax Carbo).—The bird in front is in full plumage, that behind in its Spring dress.

The cormorant belongs to the natural order of the Pelicanidæ of Linnæus, and the species have the characteristic habit of watching on high cliffs, and, on perceiving a fish in the water, of darting down like an arrow and seizing its prey. The "greater cormorant," however, more frequently shoots along in a line nearly close to the surface of the water, or, sitting on the wave, dives after the prey. It is trained to fish for man's use in China. It is common on the coasts of Syria and Palestine; Rauwolff saw numbers of them along the sea-washed crags of Acre, which he mistook for sea-eagles. The cormorant is a widely-diffused genus, and is found in almost every country in the world. (See the Penny Cyclopædia, s. v. Pelicanidæ.) The large kind weighs about seven pounds, and is nearly of the same size as the goose; it lives upon fish, and has a long, straight, and compressed bill, with the upper mandible hooked at the point, to confine the prey with the greater security; its head and neck are of a sooty blackness, more resembling in figure those of the goose than of the gull. Its distinguishing character, however, consists in its toes being united by membranes, and by the middle toe being notched like a saw, to assist it in holding its fishy prey. On the approach of winter these birds are seen dispersed along the seashore, and ascending the mouths of rivers; they are remarkably voracious, and have such a quick digestion that the appetite appears insatiable. They build their nests on the highest parts of the cliffs that overhang the sea; the female usually lays three or four eggs about the size of those of a goose, and of a pale green color. See BIRD.

Corn. There are several words thus translated in the English version of the Scriptures, in which it is used in the proper sense of grain of any kind, and never in the American application of maize or "Indian corn" (Zea mays of Linn.), which it is generally thought was anciently unknown. In 1817, Parmentier (Nouveau Dictionnaire d'Hist. Naturelle, vol. xviii), founding on the silence of Varro, Columella, Pliny, and the other agricultural and botanical writers of classical antiquity, concluded that maize was unknown till the discovery of America; and in 1834 Meyer asserted that "nothing in botanical geography is more certain than the New-World derivation of maize" (quoted by Duchartre in Orbigny's Dict. d'Hist. Natur.). But since then, in the magnificent monograph (Hist. Naturelle du Maïs, 1836), M. Bonafous, the director of the Royal Garden of Agriculture at Turin, has shown that it is figured in a Chinese botanical work as old as the middle of the sixteenth century—a time when the discoveries of Columbus could scarcely have penetrated to the Celestial Empire; and, what is more conclusive, in 1819 M. Rifaud discovered under the head of a mummy at Thebes not only grains, but leaves of Indian corn. Nor is it at all impossible that the ζειά of Homer and Theophrastus may include the plant in question. The wide diffusion of this corn through the Indian archipelago, and on the Indian continent itself, is in favor of the hypothesis which claims it as a native of the Old World; and if it was known to the Egyptians, nothing could be more natural than its early introduction into Palestine.—Fairbairn, s. v. See CEREALS.

1. The word דָּגָן, dagan' (from its increase), which is rendered "grain," "corn," and sometimes "wheat" in the Auth. Vers., is the most general of the Hebrew terms representing "corn," and is more comprehensive than any word in our language, seeing that it probably includes not only all the proper cereals, but also various kinds of pulse and seeds of plants, which we never comprehend under the name of "corn," or even of "grain." It may therefore be taken to represent all the commodities which we describe by the different words corn, grain, seeds, pease, beans. Among other places in which this word occurs, see most common outermost garment in Western Asia. This singular neglect has arisen from their information being chiefly derived from Shaw and others, who describe the costume of the Arab tribes or Moors of Northern Africa, where the outer garment is more generally the bournoos (fig. 3), a woollen cloak, not unlike the abba, but furnished with a hood, and which is sometimes strangely confounded, even by well-informed persons, with a totally different outer garment worn in the same regions, usually called the hyke, but which is also, according to its materials, quality, or color, distinguished by various other names; and writers have produced some confusion by not observing that these names refer to an article of raiment which under all these names is essentially the same. Regardless of these minute distinctions, this part of dress may be described as a large woollen blanket, either white or brown, and in summer a cotton sheet (usually blue or white, or both colors together). Putting one corner before over the left shoulder, the wearer brings it behind, and then under the right arm, and so over the body, throwing it behind over the left shoulder, and leaving the right arm free for action. This very picturesque mode of wearing the hyke is shown in fig. 2 of the accompanying cut. Another mode of wearing it is shown in fig. 3. It is sometimes thrown over the head as a protection from the sun or wind (fig. 1), and calls to mind the various passages of Scripture in which persons are described as covering their heads with their mantles (2 Sam. xv, 30; 1 Kings xix, 13; Esther vi, 12). This article of dress, originally borrowed from the nomades, is known in Arabia, and extends westward to the shores of the Atlantic, being most extensively used by all classes of the population. The seat of this dress, and of the abba respectively, is indicated by the direction of their importation into Egypt. The hykes are imported from the west (i. e. from North Africa), and the abbas from Syria. The close resemblance of the above group of real costume to those in which the traditionary ecclesiastical and traditionary artistical costumes are displayed, must be obvious to the most cursory observer. It may also be noticed that the hyke is not without some resemblance, as to the manner in which it was worn, to the outer garment of one of the figures in the Egyptian family, supposed to represent the arrival of Joseph's brethren in Egypt (above).

(b) We now turn to the costumes which are seen in the towns and villages of south-western Asia.

In the Scriptures drawers are only mentioned in the injunction that the high-priest should wear them (Exod. xxviii, 42), which seems to show that they were not generally in use; nor have we any evidence that they ever became common. Drawers descending to the middle of the thighs were worn by the ancient Egyptians, and workmen often laid aside all the rest of their dress when occupied in their labors. As far as this part of dress was used at all by the Hebrews, it was doubtless either like this, or similar to those which are now worn in Western Asia by all, except some among the poorer peasantry, and by many of the Bedouin Arabs. They are of linen or cotton, of ample breadth, tied around the body by a running string, or band, and always worn next the skin, not over the shirt, as in Europe.

It will be asked, when the poor Israelite had pawned his outer garment "wherein he slept," what dress was left to him? The answer is probably supplied by the annexed engraving, which represents slightly different garments of cotton, or woollen frocks or shirts, which often, in warm weather, form the sole dress of the Bedouin peasants, and the lower class of townspeople. To this the abba or hyke is the proper outer robe (as in fig. 1, second cut preceding), but is usually, in summer, dispensed with in the daytime, and in the ordinary pursuits and occupations of life. It is sometimes (as in the foregoing cut, fig. 2) worn without, but more usually with a girdle; and it will be seen that the shorter specimens are not unlike the dress of one of the figures (fig. 3) in the earliest of the Egyptian subjects which have been produced. The shirt worn by the superior classes is of the same shape, but of finer materials. This is shown in the accompanying figure, which represents a gentleman as just risen from bed. If we call this a shirt, the Hebrews doubtless had it — the sole dress (excepting the cloak) of the poor, and the inner robe of the rich. Such, probably, were the "sheets" (translated "shirts" in some versions), of which Samson despoiled thirty Philistines to pay the forfeit of his riddle (Judg. xiv, 13, 19). It is shown from the Talmud, indeed, that the Hebrews of later days had a shirt called חֻלְצָה, chaluk', which, it would appear, was often of wool (Lightfoot, Hor. Heb. on Luke ix, 3), and which is described as the ordinary inner garment, the outer being the cloak or mantle. This shows that the shirt or frock was, as in modern usage, the ordinary dress of the Jews, to which a mantle (abba, hyke, or bournoos) was the outer covering.

Modern Oriental Undress.

The Talmud enumerates eighteen several garments which formed the clothing of the Jews from head to foot (Talm. Hieros. Sabb. fol. 15; Talm. Bab. Sabb. fol. 120), mentioning, however, two sandals, two buskins, etc. This shows, at least, one thing, that they were not more sparingly clad than the modern Orientals. This being the case, we may be sure that although persons of the humbler classes were content with the shirt and the mantle, the wealthier people had other robes between these two, and forming a complete dress without the mantle, which with them was probably confined to out-of-door wear, or ceremonial use. It is, of course, impossible to discriminate these precisely, but in this matter we cannot be far wrong in trusting to the analogy of existing usages.

In all the annexed figures, representing persons of the superior class, we observe the shirt covered by a striped (sometimes figured) gown or caftan of mingled silk and cotton. It descends to the ankles, with long sleeves, extending a few inches beyond the fingers' ends, but divided from a point a little above the wrist, so that the hand is generally exposed, though it may be concealed by the sleeve when necessary; for it is customary to cover the hands in the presence of a person of high rank. It is very common, especially in winter, for persons to sleep without removing this gown, but only unloosing the girdle by which it is bound. It is not unusual within doors to see persons without any article of dress outside this; but it is considered decidedly as an undress, and no respectable person is beheld out of doors, or receives or pays visits, without an outer covering. Hence persons clad in this alone are said to be "naked" in Scripture—that is, not in the usual complete dress; for there can be no manner of doubt that this, or something like this, is the כְּתֹנֶת, ketho'neth, of Scripture (Exod. xxviii, 40; Job xxx, 18; Isa. xxii, 21, etc.). A similar robe is worn by the women, as was also the case among the Israelites (2 Sam. xiii, 18, 19; Cant. v, 3). It is in the bosom of this robe that various articles are carried. See Bosom.

The girdle worn over this, around the waist, is usually a colored shawl, or long piece of figured white muslin. The girdle of the poorer classes is of coarse stuff, and often of leather, with clasps. This leathern girdle is also much used by the Arabs, and by persons of condition when equipped for a journey. It is sometimes ornamented with workings in colored worsted, or silk, or with metal studs, shells, beads, etc. Both kinds of girdles were certainly in use among the Hebrews (2 Kings i, 8; Matt. iii, 4; Mark i, 6; comp. Jer. xiii, 1). See Girdle. It seems from 2 Sam. xx, 8 (comp. fig. 1 above), that it was usual to wear a knife or poniard in the girdle. This custom is still general, and denotes not any deadly disposition, but the want of clasp-knives. Men of literary vocations replace it by an ink-horn, as was also the case among the Israelites (Ezek. ix, 2).

Over the gown is worn either the short-sleeved gibbeh (fig. 3), which is a long coat of woollen cloth, or the long-sleeved benish (fig. 2), which is also of woollen cloth, and may be worn either over or instead of the other. The benish is, by reason of its long sleeves (with which the hands may be covered), the robe of ceremony, and is worn in the presence of superiors and persons of rank. Over one or both of these robes may be worn the abba, bournoos, or hyke, in any of the modes already indicated. Aged persons often wrap up the head and shoulders with the latter, in the manner shown in fig. 4.

This same hyke or wrapper is usually taken by persons going on a journey, for the purpose of being used in the same manner as a protection from the sun or wind. This is shown in the annexed cut, representing a group of persons equipped for travel. The robe is here more succinct and compact, and the firm manner in which the whole dress is girded up about the loins calls to mind the passages of Scripture in which the action of "girding up the loins" for a journey is mentioned.

From this it is also seen that travellers usually wear a sword, and the manner in which it is worn is correctly shown. It would also appear that the Jews had swords for such occasional uses (Matt. xxvi, 51; Luke xxii, 36).

The necessity of baring the arm for any kind of exertion must be evident from the manner in which it is encumbered in all the dresses we have produced. This action is often mentioned in Scripture, which alone proves that the arm was in ordinary circumstances similarly encumbered by the dress. For ordinary purposes a hasty tucking up of the sleeve of the right arm suffices; but for a continued action special contrivances are necessary. These are curious, as will be seen by the cut adjoining. The full sleeves of the shirt are sometimes drawn up by means of cords, which pass round each shoulder, and cross behind, where they are tied in a knot. This custom is particularly affected by servants and workmen, who have const. nt occasion for baring the arm; but others, whose occasions are more incidental, and who are, therefore, unprovided with the necessary cords, draw up the sleeves and tie them together behind between the shoulders (fig. 2).

For the dress of females, see the article WOMAN. Certain parts of dress, also, admit of separate consideration, such as the head-dress or turban (q. v.), and the dress of the feet or sandals (q. v.).—Kitto, s. v. Dress. Cotelerius (Cotelier), JOHN BAPTIST, an eminent French scholar, born at Nismes, 1627. At twelve years of age he could read the Hebrew Bible and the Greek Testament with ease. In 1649 he was elected a member of the Sorbonne. He did not receive the degree of doctor, because he refused to take orders. In 1676 he was made Greek lecturer at Paris, and retained this post, with great reputation, till his death, August 2, 1686. Most of his literary labor was spent upon the Greek fathers; and in 1672 he published the "Apostolic Fathers" (Patres Aevi Apostolici, Paris), of which the best edition is Patrum qui temporibus Apostolicis floruerunt opera, recensuit J. Clericus (Amst. 1724, 2 vols. fol.). In 1667 he was commissioned by Colbert to revise and catalogue the Greek manuscripts of the Royal Library. He was engaged in this work, conjointly with the celebrated Du Cange, for five years. In 1676 he obtained through Colbert the chair of Greek at the Royal College of Paris. In 1677 he began the publication of his Ecclesiæ Græcæ Monumenta, e MSS. codicibus, Gr. and Lat. (3 vols. 4to; the 3d vol. appeared two days before his death). The fourth volume of this work, for which he had collected much material, was published in 1692 by the Maurines.—See Wetzer u. Welte, Kirchen-Lex. ii, 905; Dupin, Nouvelle Bibliothèque, xviii, 186.

Cottage is employed in our version for three Hebrew words. See BOOTH.

Modern Oriental Booths or Sheds.

1. סֻכָּה, sukkah', signifies a hut made of boughs (Isa. i, 8), and is usually elsewhere translated "booth." It was anciently the custom in the East, as it still is, to erect little temporary sheds, covered with leaves, straw, or turf, giving shelter from the heat by day and the cold dews at night to the watchman that kept the garden or vineyard while the fruit was ripening, which otherwise might be stolen, or destroyed by jackals. These erections, being intended only for the occasion, were of the very slightest fabric, and when the fruits were gathered were either taken down, or left to fall to pieces, or were blown down during the winter (Job xxvii, 18). See LODGE.

Modern Oriental Lodge in a Melon-patch.

2. מְלוּנָה, melunah' (fem. of מָלוֹן, an inn), signifies properly a lodging-place, and is associated with the booth ("cottage") in the above passage (Isa. i, 8), where it is translated "lodge," being probably a somewhat slighter structure, if possible, as a cucumber patch is more temporary than a vineyard. It also occurs in Isa. xxiv, 20, in the mistranslated expression "and shall be removed [i. e. shaken about] like a cottage," where it denotes a hanging-bed or hammock suspended from trees, in which travellers, and especially the watchmen in gardens, were accustomed to sleep during summer, so as to be out of the reach of wild animals. The swinging of these aptly corresponds with the staggering of a drunken man. Or it may, perhaps, more appropriately denote here those frail structures of boughs, supported by a few poles, which the Orientals use for the same purpose.

3. In Zeph. ii, 6, the original term is כָּרֹת, keroth' (literally diggings), i. e. pits for holding water, and, instead of "dwellings [and] cottages for shepherds," it should be rendered "fields full of shepherds' cisterns," the more likely, since we find the cotton-tree (Gossypium arboreum, less usual than, and distinct from, the cotton plant, Gossyp. herbac.) mentioned still by Pliny as the only remarkable tree of the adjacent Ethiopia; and since Arabia, on its other side, appears to have known cotton from time immemorial, to grow it in abundance, and in parts to be highly favorable to that product. In India, however, we have the earliest records of the use of cotton for dress, of which, including the starching of it, some curious traces are found as early as 800 B.C., in the Institutes of Menu; also (it is said, on the authority of Prof. Wilson) in the Rig-Veda, 105, v. 8. (For these and some other curious antiquities of the subject, see Royle's Culture and Commerce of Cotton in India, p. 117–122.)

Cotton is now both grown and manufactured in various parts of Syria and Palestine, and, owing probably to its being less conductive of heat, seems preferred for turbans and shirts to linen; but there is no proof that, till they came in contact with Persia, the Hebrews generally knew of it as a distinct fabric from linen, whilst the negative proof of language and the probabilities of fact offer a strong presumption that, if they obtained it at all in commerce, they confounded it with linen under the terms shesh or buts. The greater cleanliness and durability of linen probably established its superiority over cotton for sepulchral purposes in the N.-T. period, by which time the latter must have been commonly known, and thus there is no reason for assigning cotton as the material of the "linen clothes" (ὀθόνια) of which we read. (For the whole subject, see Yates's Textrinum Antiquorum, pt. i, chap. vi, and app. D.)—Smith, s. v. See BOTANY.

Cotton, George Edward Lynch, Anglican bishop of Calcutta and metropolitan of the Anglican dioceses of India and Ceylon, was born at Chester, England, Oct. 29, 1832. After studying at Westminster School and Trinity College, he was appointed to a mastership in Rugby School, and shortly after was elected to a fellowship at Trinity College. About 1841 he succeeded to the mastership of the fifth form, the highest but one. In 1852 he was elected head master of Marlborough College, which under his management rose to a high position among leading public schools. In 1858 he was appointed to the metropolitan see of Calcutta, where he rendered himself generally beloved. In 1863, with the full concurrence of the governor general, he officially sanctioned an innovation in the use of consecrated churches, which had often been desired, but never till then secured. Since the mutiny, several Scotch regiments have been stationed in the barracks of Upper India, and in many stations they have no churches of their own. Bishop Cotton ordered that at a convenient hour on the Sunday the Episcopal churches should be available for their worship, and that the Presbyterian clergyman should have full liberty to officiate after the rules of his own Church, to the great dissatisfaction of the High-Church party in the Church of England. In England strong measures were suggested in order to compel him to retract. But he knew that the measure was right in itself, that the law was on his side, and that his conduct was heartily approved by the Indian government and by all right-thinking men. In the same spirit, when the Marriage Bill was brought before the Legislative Council, to provide increased facilities for the marriage of Presbyterians and Nonconformists, and give to Nonconformist ministers and registrars powers which they do not possess in England itself, he gave the act his cordial approval. He was accidentally drowned while disembarking from a steamer, October 6, 1866.—Ann. Amer. Cyclopædia for 1866, p. 261; Brit. Quart. Review, Jan. 1867.

Cotton, John, an eminent Congregational minister, was born at Derby, Eng., Dec. 4, 1585. He was a student in Cambridge, became fellow of Emmanuel College, and was chosen successively head lecturer and dean. In 1612 he was settled as minister at Boston, Lincolnshire. After preaching some few years, he was silenced for nonconformity with some ceremonies which he held to be unscriptural, but after a short time he was reinstated. About 1632, to escape examination before the High Commission Court, he secreted himself in London, and thence sailed for New England, arriving in Boston Sept. 3, 1633. On Oct. 10 he was appointed preacher in the First Church. He died Dec. 23, 1652. He published An Abstract of the Laws of New England (1641):—The Church's Resurrection (1642):—The Pouring out of the Seven Vials (1642):—The Way of Life (Lond. 1641, 4to):—Sermons on Mercy and Justice of God (Lond. 1641, 4to);—Exposition of the Canticles (Lond. 1642, 8vo):—The Covenant of Grace (Lond. 1662, sm. 8vo):—A practical Commentary upon the 1*st Epistle of John* (Lond. 1656, fol.), with several minor writings.—Sprague, Annals, i, 25.

Couch (יָצוּעַ, yatsu'a, something spread, Gen. xlix, 4; "bed," 1 Chron. v, 1; Job xvii, 13; Psa. lxiii, 6; cxxxii, 3; מִשְׁכָּב, mishkab', something to lie upon, Job vii, 13, elsewhere "bed;" עֶרֶשׂ, e'res, something erected, Psa. vi, 6; Amos iii, 12; vi, 4; "bed," Job vii, 13; Psa. xli, 3; cxxxii, 3; Prov. vii, 16; Cant. i, 16; "bedstead," Deut. iii, 11; κλινίδιον, a little bed, Luke v, 19, 24; κράββατος, a pallet, Acts v, 15, elsewhere "bed"). Feather-beds, as among us, are unknown in the East, as indeed generally in southern climates. The poor sleep on mats or wrapped in their overclothes (Exod. xxii, 27; Deut. xxiv, 13; comp. Theocr. xviii, 19; Stobæi Serm. 72, p. 404: as to Ruth iii, 9; Ezek. xvi, 8, see Biel in the Miscell. Lips. Nov. v, 209 sq.), and, in the open air, sometimes have only a stone for a pillow (Arvieux, iii, 216; comp. Gen. ix, 21, 23; xxviii, 11). The wealthy use bolsters or mattresses (Russel, Aleppo, i, 195), stuffed with wool or cotton. These are not laid upon a bedstead, but on a raised portion (divan, q. v.) along the side of the room, which by day serves for a seat (Harmar, i, 134; ii, 71; Rosenmüller, Morgenl. iii, 211; vi, 14; Lorent, Wander. p. 32). Whether the couches of the ancient Hebrews for the sick or sleeping, which are usually termed מִטָּה, mittah' (Gen. xlvii, 31; 1 Sam. xix, 13; 2 Sam. iv, 7; 2 Kings i, 4), מִשְׁכָּב, mishkab' (Exod. xxi, 18; 2 Sam. xiii, 5; Cant. iii, 1), עֶרֶשׂ, e'res (Job vii, 13; Cant. i, 16; Prov. vii, 11; properly a bedstead, see Deut. iii, 11), were upon such a platform, is uncertain, as they appear to have been movable (1 Sam. xix, 15), and were probably used in the daytime, like sofas, for sitting down and repose (1 Sam. xxviii, 23; Ezek. xxiii, 41; Amos iii, 12; vi, 4; yet compare 2 Kings iv, 10). Costly carpets graced the houses of xxiii, 12; 1 Chron. xxxiii, 5; Ps. xcii, 13, etc. See TABERNACLE; TEMPLE. The same word is very often employed for the enclosures of the "villages" of Palestine, and under the form of Hazer or Hazor (q. v.) frequently occurs in the names of places in the A. V. See VILLAGE. It also designates the court of a prison (Neh. iii, 25; Jer. xxxii, 2, etc.), of a private house (2 Sam. xvii, 18), and of a palace (2 Kings xx, 4; Esth. i, 5, etc.). In Isa. xxxiv, 19, "court for owls," the cognate חָצִיר, chatsir', is found. 2. In 2 Chron. iv, 9, and vi, 13, however, a different word is employed, apparently, for the above sacred places —oratria, עֲזָרָה, azarah', from a root of similar meaning. This word also occurs in Ezek. xliii, 14, 17, 20; xlv, 19 (A. V. "settle"), but apparently with reference to the ledge or offset of the altar (q. v.) 3. In Amos vii, 13, where the Hebrew word is בַּיִת, beyth, a "house," our translators, anxious to use a term applicable specially to a king's residence, have put "court." 4. In the Apocrypha αὐλή is rendered "court" with respect to the Temple (1 Esdr. ix, 1; 1 Macc. iv, 38; ix, 54), or the palace (1 Macc. xi, 46), which latter is expressed also (1 Macc. xiii, 40) by a periphrasis (τὰ περὶ ἡμῶν). 5. In the N. T. the word αὐλή designates such an open court (as it is once rendered, Rev. xi, 2, referring to the temple; elsewhere "hall" or "palace"); and βασίλεια, a palace, is once (Luke vii, 25) rendered "kings' courts." See PALACE.

The term תָּוֶךְ, ta'vek (fully תּוֹךְ חַבַּיִת, middle of the house, 1 Sam. iv, 6), also designates in Hebrew the quadrangular area in Eastern houses, denominated in the New Testament τὸ μέσον, the centre or "midst" (Luke v, 19). This court is sometimes paved with marble of various kinds, and in the centre there is usually a fountain, if the situation of the place admits of it. The court is generally surrounded on all sides, but sometimes only on one side, with a cloister or covered walk, called מוּסָךְ, musak', over which, if the house have more than one story, is a gallery of the same dimensions, supported by columns. Large companies were received into the court on particular occasions (Esth. i, 5; Luke v, 19). At such times, a large veil of thick cloth was extended by ropes over the whole of the court, in order to exclude the heat of the sun. This veil or curtain of the area may be that termed in the New Testament στέγη, covering, or "roof" (Mark ii, 4; Luke vii, 6). See HOUSE.

Court-yard of an Oriental House.

COURT, JUDICIAL. Among the Jews, besides the Sanhedrim (q. v.), or great "council" (q. v.), there were lesser courts (συνέδρια, Matt. x, 17; Mark xiii, 9), of which there were two at Jerusalem, and one in each town of Palestine. The constitution of these courts is a doubtful point. According to Talmudical writers, the number of judges was twenty-three in places where there was a population of 120, and three where the population fell below that number (Mishna, Sanhedr. i, 6). Josephus, however, gives a different account; he states (Ant. iv, 8, 14) that the court, as constituted by Moses (Deut. xvi, 18), consisted of seven judges, each of whom had two Levites as assessors; accordingly, in the reform which he carried out in Galilee, he appointed seven judges for the trial of minor offences (War, ii, 20, 5). The statement of Josephus is generally accepted as correct; but it should be noticed that these courts were not always in existence. They may have been instituted by himself on what he conceived to be the true Mosaic model; a supposition which is rendered probable by his farther institution of a council of Seventy, which served as a court for capital offences, altogether independent of the Sanhedrim at Jerusalem (Life, 14; War, ii, 20, 5). The existence of local courts, however constituted, is clearly implied in the passages quoted from the N. T.; and perhaps the judgment (Matt. v, 21) applies to them. See MARKET. Under the Roman government there was a provincial court (συμβούλιον, Acts xxv, 12), a kind of jury or privy council, consisting of a certain number of assessors (consiliarii, Sueton. Tib. 33, 55), who assisted the procurators in the administration of justice and other public matters.—Smith, s. v. Council. See JUDGE.

COURT, ROYAL. The natives of the East have ever been remarkable for a more reverential estimation of the state and dignity of a king than has usually prevailed among other people, and to this fact the language of Scripture bears ample testimony. Although on some special occasions we read of the Jewish monarchs sitting in the gate with their people (2 Sam. xix, 8; Jer. xxxviii, 7), and the prophets appear to have had easy access to them (1 Kings xx, 13; 2 Chron. xxv, 15), yet it is abundantly evident that regal state was, in general, fully maintained, with only that admixture of occasional intercourse and familiarity which may be noticed by every traveller at the present day in the East. Hence it was accounted the height of human felicity to be admitted into that splendid circle which surrounded the person of the sovereign, and they seem to have considered it a good omen if any one was so fortunate as to behold the face of the king (Prov. xxix, 26); whence the expression of seeing God (Matt. v, 8) is to be understood as the enjoyment of the highest possible happiness, such as his favor and protection, especially in the life to come. In reference to this custom, the angel Gabriel replied to Zacharias that he was Gabriel that stood in the presence of God; thus intimating that he was in a state of high favor and trust (Luke i, 19). Hence to "stand before the king" is a phrase which intended the same as to be occupied in his service, and to perform some duty for him (Gen. xli, 46; 1 Sam. xxii, 6, 7), and imported the most eminent and dignified station at court. This illustrates the statement of Christ respecting children, "In heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. xviii, 1–10), an allusion to the custom of Oriental courts, where the great men, those who are highest in office and favor, are most frequently in the prince's palace and presence (Esth. i, 14; 1 Kings x, 8; xii, 6; 2 Kings xxv, 19). Cowper, WILLIAM, an eminent Scotch divine, was born at Edinburgh in 1566. He studied at the University of St. Andrews, and in 1585 was appointed minister of Bothkenner, Sterlingshire. In 1593 he removed to Perth, where he continued until 1612, after which he was appointed bishop of Galloway. He died in 1619. His works breathe a spirt of cordial piety, and the simplicity and strength of his style are peculiarly worthy of commendation. Among them we remark "Heaven opened" (5th ed., Lond. 1619, 4to). A collection of his works was published after his death (Lond. 1629, fol.):—Darling, Cyclop. Bibl. s. v.

Cox, F. A., D.D., an eminent English Baptist minister, was born about 1783. He was pastor of the Baptist church at Hackney, London, and was one of the leading men in many of the religious societies of the metropolis. Of his works the most important are the History of the Baptist Missions, a volume on Antiquities, reprinted from the Encyclopædia Metropolitana; Our Young Men, a prize essay (1847); and a Life of Melancthon. He was a contributor to the first series of the Journal of Sacred Literature. His name is worthy of being associated with those of Ryland, Fuller, Carey, Marshman, Ward, Robert Hall, and John Foster, who in recent times have brought honor on the Baptist denomination by their literary as well as their religious labors.

Cox, Melville Beveridge, a Methodist Episcopal missionary to Africa, was born at Hallowell, Maine, in 1799; was converted in 1818; entered the ministry in 1822; on account of failing health was superannuated from 1825 to 1831; and afterwards served some time as agent of the Wesleyan University. In 1831 he was stationed at Raleigh, N. C. Soon afterwards he volunteered to go to Africa as a missionary, and sailed from Norfolk, Va., November 6, 1832, arriving in Liberia March 8, 1833. Here at once he set to work to lay the foundations of the Church in Africa. He labored faithfully, organizing the mission, collecting information, and preaching and teaching incessantly. In a few months he had formed a school of 70 scholars; but the African fever seized him, and on the 21st of July, 1833, after four months' labor, he died in triumph. Mr. Cox was a man of great piety and devoted zeal.—Meth. Mag. and Quart. Review, Jan. 1834; Amer. Miss. Memorial, p. 431; Cox, G. F., Life and Remains of M. B. Cox (N. Cox, Richard, bishop of Ely, was born about 1500, at Whaddon, Buckinghamshire, England. He was educated at Eton School and at King's College, where he obtained a fellowship in 1519. He was invited by cardinal Wolsey to Oxford to fill up his new foundation. For speaking his mind too freely of the corruptions of popery, he was deprived of his preferment and thrown into prison. When he had recovered his liberty he left Oxford; some time after he was chosen master of Eton School, which flourished remarkably under him; and by the interest of archbishop Cranmer he obtained several dignities in the Church, viz., the archdeaconry of Ely, a prebend of the same church and of Lincoln, and the deanery of Christ Church. He was appointed tutor to prince Edward, and on that prince's accession to the throne became a great favorite at court. He was made a privy councillor and the king's almoner; was elected chancellor of the University of Oxford in 1547; the next year installed canon of Windsor, and the year following dean of Westminster. About this time he was appointed one of the commissioners to visit the University of Oxford, and is accused by some of abusing his authority by destroying many books out of his zeal against popery. After Mary's accession he was stripped of his preferments and committed to the Marshalsea; but his confinement was not long, and on his release he went to Strasburg, and thence to Frankfort, where he formed a kind of university, and appointed a Greek and a Hebrew lecturer, a divinity professor, and a treasurer for the contributions remitted from England. On the death of Mary he returned, and was the chief champion on the Protestant side in the disputation at Westminster between eight papists and an equal number of the Reformed clergy. His abilities and zeal were rewarded by the bishopric of Ely, over which see he presided above 21 years. He opposed with great zeal the queen's retaining the crucifix and lights in her chapel, and was a strenuous advocate for the marriage of the clergy, against which she had contracted a strange aversion. He was one of the compilers of the Liturgy of the Church of England; and when a new translation of the Bible was made in the reign of Elizabeth, now commonly known by the name of "The Bishop's Bible," the Four Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, and the Epistle to the Romans were allotted to him for his portion. A number of his tracts on the Romish controversy are to be found in the addenda to Burnet's History of the Reformation. Several letters and small pieces of his have been published by Strype in his Annals of the Reformation.—Downe, Life of Bishop Cox; Collier, Ecclesiastical History; Kippis, Biographia Britannica, iv, 396 sq.

Cradock, Samuel, B.D., an eminent Noncomformist, was born in 1620, and was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. He was presented to the college living of North Cadbury, but ejected for nonconformity in 1662, and retired to an estate at Wickham Brook which had been left to him. He died in 1760. He was a man of serious and truly catholic spirit, solid judgment, digested thought, clear method, and unaffected style. His works have been greatly commended by archbishop Tillotson and bishop Reynolds. Dr. Doddridge says that no author assisted him more in what relates to the New Testament. His principal works are, The History of the O. T. methodized (Lond. 1683, fol.):—The Harmony of the Four Evangelists (Lond. 1688, fol.):—The Apostolical History, with an Analytical Paraphrase (Lond. 1672, fol.):—Knowledge and Practice (4th ed., with eight new chapters, Lond. 1702, fol.).—Darling, *Cyclop. Cradock, Walter, an eminent English divine, was born at Trefala, Monmouthshire. He was educated at the University of Oxford, joined the Puritans, and became curate of St. Mary's, Cardiff. During the civil wars he became pastor of Allhallows the Great, London, and occasionally itinerated through Wales. He died in 1660. He was an Independent in Church government—a man of excellent character and high reputation; in doctrine, he was zealous in preaching justification by imputed righteousness. His principal works are, Gospel Libertie in the Extensions and Limitations of it (Lond. 1648, 4to):—Divine Drops distilled from the Fountain of Holy Scriptures (Lond. 1650, 4to):—Gospel Holinesse (Lond. 1651, 4to). A collection of his works has been published (Chester, 1800, 8vo).—Darling, Cyclop. Bibliog. s. v.

See MECHANIC. Persons of this class professionally (for every Jew was required to learn some manual trade, to fall back upon in case of want) seem to have congregated in a special street or bazaar (q. v.) in the environs of Jerusalem (1 Chron. iv, 14, where it is called a valley), or rather in the vicinity of Lod (Neh. xi, 35); regarded by Dr. Robinson (Phys. Geogr. of Palest. p. 113) as the plain of Beit Nuba, or rather a side valley opening into it. See CHARASHIM.

Craig, JOHN, one of the Scottish Reformers, was born in Scotland about 1512. "Having spent some time as a tutor in England, he returned to Scotland and entered the Dominican order, of which he had not long been a member when he fell under the suspicion of heresy, and was cast into prison. On his release he travelled on the Continent; and after some time was, through cardinal Pole's influence, intrusted with the education of the novices in connection with the Dominican order at Bologna. While here, Calvin's Institutes fell in his way, and converted him to Protestant doctrines. Having openly avowed the change in his opinions, he was brought before the Inquisition, and sentenced to be burnt—a fate from which he was saved by the mob, on the death of pope Paul IV, breaking open the prisons in Rome, and setting the prisoners at liberty. Craig escaped to Vienna, and obtained some favor at the court of Maximilian II; but the news of his being there reached Rome, and the pope demanded his surrender as one condemned for heresy. The emperor, however, instead of complying with the request of his holiness, gave Craig a safe-conduct out of Germany. He now returned to Scotland, and was appointed the colleague of John Knox in the parish church of Edinburgh. Thinking the marriage of queen Mary and Bothwell contrary to the Word of God, he, while holding this position, boldly refused to proclaim the banns. In 1572 Craig was sent 'to illuminate the dark places' in Forfarshire and Aberdeenshire, and remained in the North until 1579, when he was appointed minister to king James VI in Edinburgh. He now took a leading part in the affairs of the Church, was the compiler of part of the Second Book of Discipline, and the writer of the National Covenant signed in 1580 by the king and his household. He was a man of great conscientiousness, and was not slow to oppose the proceedings of the court when he deemed them opposed to Scripture, and to speak wholesome but unpleasant truths to his majesty himself. He died December, 1600."—Chambers, Encyclopædia, s. v.

Crakanthorp, RICHARD, D.D., was born at Strickland, in Westmoreland, in 1567. He was admitted to Queen's College, Oxford, in 1583, and became fellow in 1598. He obtained the rectory of Black Notley, Essex, and died in 1624. He had the reputation of being a general scholar, was quite a canonist, perfectly acquainted with ecclesiastical antiquity and scholastic divinity, and was a celebrated preacher. His principal works are, Defensio Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ contra M. Antonii de Dominis, D. Archiepiscopi Spalatensis, injurias (new edit. in The Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology, Oxf. 1847, 8vo):—Rome's Seer overseene (Lond. 1631, fol.):—The Defence of Constantine, with a Treatise of the Pope's temporal Monarchie (Lond. 1621, 4to).—Darling, Cyclopædia Bibliographica, s. v.

Cramer, JOHANN ANDREAS, a German theologian and poetical writer, was born at Josephstadt, Saxony, Jan. 29, 1723. He studied at Leipsic, was invited to Copenhagen by Frederick V, and, with the exception of three years, resided in Denmark from 1754 to 1788, in which latter year he died. At the time of his death he was chancellor of the University of Kiel. He translated Bossuet's Universal History, the Homilies of St. Chrysostom, and the Psalms of David into verse (Leips. 1755), and wrote the Northern Spectator (der nordische Aufseher), three vols. (Copenhagen, 1758); Sermons, twenty-two vols.; and Poems, three vols. (1782). Germany ranks him among her best lyric poets.

Crane occurs in our version as the translation of סוּס (sus, literally a leaper, from its swiftness, Isa. xxxviii, 14) or סִיס (sis, Jer. viii, 7), in connection with another bird, the עָגוּר (agur', the chatterer, or, as Gesenius renders it in Isaiah, the chattering, as an epithet of the other), which latter is rendered "swallow" in our version. The Rabbins agree with our version in rendering the former of these words (sus or sis) by "crane;" but Bochart and Gesenius (in accordance with the Sept., Theod., and Vulg.), more correctly, as we think, decide in favor of "swallow;" while Luther, rejecting both, prefers "heron." Where so much diversity of opinion reigns, it will be most safe to search for the true meaning by examining the internal evidence furnished by the texts in question, the two names occurring in no other instance. In Isaiah, allusion is made to the voice of both the species (if distinct), which is described by the verb "to chatter," in accordance, or nearly so, with all critical authorities. See SWALLOW. In Jeremiah, where both names occur in the same order, the birds are represented as "observing the time of their coming." Now, if the "crane" of Europe had been meant by either denomination, the clamorous habits of the species would not have been expressed as "chattering;" and it is most probable that the striking characteristics of that bird, which are so elegantly and forcibly displayed in Hesiod and Aristophanes, would have supplied the lofty diction of prophetical inspiration with associations of a character still more exalted. Sus or sis is the name of a fabulous long-legged bird in Arabian legends, but it also indicates the expressive sound of the swallow's voice, while agur is transferred with slight alteration to the stork in several northern tongues. The Teuticon aiber, Dutch oyevaer, Esthonian aigr and aigro, therefore support the view that the latter term is a tribal epithet of one of the great wading birds; but neither the Hebrew text nor the Teutonic names point to the crane of Europe (Ardea grus, Linn., Grus cinerea of later ornithologists), since that species has a loud trumpet voice, and therefore does not "chatter;" but especially because in its migrations it crosses the Mediterranean into Africa, and does not appear in Palestine, unless by accident (driven thither possibly by a western storm of wind); and when a troop of cranes alight under these circumstances, it is only for a moment; they do not give evidence of purposely assembling like the swallow. Thus the few characteristics indicated might seem to point out the stork, which does assemble in Syria in flocks before its departure, and is not a clamorous bird, having little or no voice. But as the stork is clearly designated by a different appellation in the original [see STORK], we must search for another species as the representative of the sus, or at least of the latter term; and we fortunately find one which completely answers to the conditions required; for, being neither a genuine crane, a stork, nor a heron, having a feeble voice, and striking, but distinct manners, it is remarkable for beauty, numbers, residence, and periodical arrival and departure. The Numidian crane (Ardea virgo of Linn., the Grus virgo of later writers, and Anthropoides virgo of some)

is the bird, we have every reason to conclude, intended by "agur," though not coming from the north, but from Central Africa, down the Nile (the very circumstance which puzzled Hasselquist), and in the spring arriving in Palestine, while troops of them proceed to Asia Minor, and some as far north as the Caspian. They are frequently found portrayed on Egyptian monuments, and the naturalist just quoted, who saw them on the Nile, afterwards shot one near Smyrna: they visit the swamp above that city, and the lake of Tiberias, and depart in the fall, but do not utter the clangor of the crane, nor adopt its flight in two columns, forming an acute angle, the better to cleave the air. This bird is not more than three feet in length; it is of a beautiful bluish gray, with the cheeks, throat, breast, and tips of the long hinder feathers and quills black, and a tuft of delicate white plumes behind each eye. It has a peculiar dancing walk, which gave rise to its French denomination of "demoiselle" (see the Penny Cyclopædia, s. v. Herons).—Kitto, s. v. See BIRD.

The Hebrew term sus occurs frequently elsewhere, but only in the sense of "horse" or cavalry.

Crane, JOHN, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Norton, Mass., March 26, 1756. He graduated at Harvard in 1780, and was installed pastor at Northbridge, Mass., June 25, 1783, where he remained until his death, Aug. 31, 1836. He published Eight Discourses on Baptism (1806) and a few occasional sermons.—Sprague, Annals, ii, 214.

Cranmer, THOMAS, archbishop of Canterbury, and one of the greatest of the English reformers, was born at Aslacton, Nottinghamshire, July 2, 1489. He entered Jesus College in 1503, became a fellow in 1510-11, studied Greek, Hebrew, and theology with great diligence, and acquired high repute for scholarship. He forfeited his fellowship by an early marriage, but his wife died within a year, and he was restored. In 1523 he took the degree of D.D. In 1528 he was at Waltham Abbey, the seat of Mr. Cressy, educating that gentleman's children. Here he met Gardiner and Fox, who asked his opinion as to Henry VIII's di-was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope; because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth, and travaileth in pain together until now," in which also the expression creature is used to designate the totality of mankind. This is first indicated by the γάρ in verse 18, which brings forward in behalf of the λογίζομαι which rests on it, that "all mankind takes part in this aspiration and in the hope of future glorification." In ver. 23, Christians, as part of humanity, are set over against the whole of it. We cannot here place Christians in contrast with the inanimate creation, and overlook entirely the non-Christian part of mankind, to whom a vague longing after the glorious freedom of the children of God could be better attributed than to inanimate nature. Paul nowhere speaks of a "change" or glorification of the earthly abode of men; this δόξα is exclusively reserved for man (1 Cor. xi, 35–50).—Krehl, N. T. Handwörterbuch; see also Ellicott, The Destiny of the Creature, 2d. ed. 1862; Journal of Sacred Literature, Oct. 1862, p. 27.

The LIVING CREATURES spoken of in Ezekiel x, 15, 17, 20 (חַי, chay, alive; the ζῶον of Revelations v, vi, sq., improperly "beast"), are imaginary or composite beings, symbolical of the divine attributes and operations, such as were common in the mythological representations of all antiquity. See CHERUB.

Credence-table, or CREDENCE, a table beside the altar, on which the cup, etc., are placed in the celebration of the mass. Du Cange says that the word credentiarius means prægustator, one that tastes beforehand, and the reference seems to be to an ancient court-practice, performed by cup-bearers and carvers, who were required to taste the wines and meats which they presented (securitatis gratiâ), to insure the safety of the monarch. The Italian word credenziéra has the same meaning. Hence also the credentz-teller, credence-plate, on which cup-bearers credenced the wine, and which means generally a plate on which a person offers anything to another; credenz-tische, credence-table, a sideboard, a cupboard with a table for the purpose of arranging in order and keeping the drinking-apparatus therein. Credences were common in ancient churches. In the Liturgies under the names of Chrysostom and St. James we meet with the words πρόθεσις and παραπράπεζον. In the Ordo Romanus the names oblationarium and prothesis occur, and one is made the explanation of the other. We meet also with the word paratorium, because when the offerings were received, preparation was made out of them for the Lord's Supper. In many instances the place of the credence-table was supplied by a shelf across the piscina: this shelf was either of wood or stone, and is to be found in many old churches. The use of credence-tables is one of the restorations of obsolete usages which have marked the so-called Puseyite movement in England.—Farrar, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Coleman, Ancient Christianity.

Credner, KARL AUGUST, was born Jan. 10, 1797, at Waltershausen, near Gotha. He studied at Jena, Breslau, and Göttingen. In 1830 he became professor extraordinary of theology at Jena, and in 1832 obtained the appointment of ordinary professor at Giessen. He died in 1857. Among his numerous writings are, Der Prophet Joel übersetzt u. erklärt (Halle, 1831):—Beiträge z. Einleit. in die biblischen Schr. i:—Die Evangelien der Petriner oder Judenchristen (Halle, 1832, ii):—Das alttest. Urevangelium (Halle, 1838):—Einleit. in das N. T. (Halle, 1836):—Zur Gesch. des Kanons (Halle, 1847; new edition by Volckmar, with additions, Berl. 1860):—Das N. T. für denkende Leser (Giess. 1841–43, 2 vols.). Credner was one of the chief representatives of the Rationalistic school in Germany. In many of his works his theological views are but little apparent, and these, especially his Einleitung, are generally valued by theologians of all schools for their vast amount of information. In some of his later works, however, he shows himself a very determined Rationalist. Credner took also an active part in the religious controversies of his time, publishing a number of books in defense of the rights of the Rationalistic party to remain in the state church, and to enjoy liberty of preaching and teaching (Die Berechtigung der protestant. Kirche Deutschlands, 1845; Asterisken, 1847; Die sittlichen Verirrungen, etc., 1853). Credner also contributed many articles to German periodicals, and to Kitto's Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature.—Herzog, Real-Encyklop. xix, 366.

Creed (credere, to believe), a form of words in which articles of belief are comprehended; not necessarily a complete summary of the faith, but a statement respecting some points which are fundamental, and have been disputed. See CONFESSION. For instance, while the doctrine of the atonement must be reckoned a fundamental part of the apostle's doctrine, it is yet not in the Apostles' Creed as a doctrine. Hence some infer that it was not believed, though the more obvious inference would be that it was not disputed (Eden, s. v.)

1. In the early Eastern Church a summary of this sort was called μάθημα, the lesson, because the catechumens were required to learn it. Sometimes, from the nature of its contents, or the uses to which it was applied, it was called σύμβολον, symbolum, a mark, token, or badge, as a seal-ring—the proof of orthodoxy; sometimes κανών, regula fidei, the rule, or the Jews. Crotia is considered a part of Hungary, but formerly possessed some privileges; among others, to exclude Protestants from its borders. In 1866 the Croatian Diet passed resolutions in favor of religious toleration.

Crocius, JOHANNES, a German theologian, was born at Laasphe July 28, 1590; studied at Herborn and Marburg, and graduated in 1608. In 1612 he became court preacher of the Landgrave Moritz at Cassel, doctor of divinity in 1613, and in 1616 preacher at Königsberg. Returning to Marburg, he became professor of Theology in the University. He was the leader of the evangelical state Church of Hesse-Cassel, and the Lutheran having overcome the Reformed Church, he fled to Cassel in 1624; but after the peace in 1653, he returned and became rector of the University. He died July 1, 1659. His principal works are, Erronea dogmata novorum Arianorum in Polonia (Bremen, 1612, 8vo); Pacis et concordiæ evangelicorum sacra defensio (Marburg, 1623, 8vo); Anti-Becanus i. e. controversiarum communium, quas Mart. Becanus Catholicis, Lutheri ac Calvini nomine perperam discretis, in Manuali, movit examen, ex S. S. et antiquitate institutum (Cassel, 1643, 2 vols. 4to); Anti-Becani a Moguntinorum theologorum calumniis justa vindicatio (Marburg, 1651); Anti-Weigelius (Cassel, 1651).—Herzog, Real-Encyklopädie, iii, 187.

Crocodile, an animal doubtless referred to under the name Leviathan (לִוְיָתָן) in the famous description of Job xli (Heb. xl, 25–xli), of which the following is a close rendering:

Canst thou draw out Leviathan with a hook,
Or with a cord canst thou press down his tongue?
Say, canst thou put a rush-[rope] in his nose,
Or with a thorn-[hook] canst thou bore his jaw?
Will he multiply to thee supplications;
Supposest thou he will speak to thee soft [things]?
Will he ratify a covenant with thee?
Wilt thou take him for a servant [for] ever?
Wilt thou play with him as with the sparrow,
Or tie him for thy maidens?
Shall there dig [a pit] for him partners,
[And] share him between Canaanites [i. e. merchants]?
Canst thou fill with darts his skin,
Or with a fish-spear [i. e. harpoon] his head?
Lay upon him [but] thy hand—
Thou wilt remember battle no more!
Lo! his [i. e. the assailant's] hope has been belied:
At the very sight of him will he be prostrated?
None [so] bold that will rouse him!
(Then who [is] he [that] before Me shall take a stand?
Who has anticipated me [in giving], that I should repay?
Under the whole heavens to me [belongs] that!)
I will not pass in silence his members,
And famed strength, and beauteous armature.
Who has disclosed the surface of his covering?
In his double [row] of grinders who can enter?
The valves of his face who has opened?
The circuits of his teeth [are] frightful!
A pride [are his] strong shields [i. e. scales],
Shut [with] a close seal:
One in [the] other will they join,
And a breath cannot come between them:
Each in its fellow will adhere;
They will cling together that they cannot be parted.
[At] his sneezings a light will flash,
And his eyes [are] like the lashes of dawn:
From his mouth will flames proceed;
Sparks of fire will escape:
From his nostrils a smoke will go,
Like a pot blown with [blazing] reeds:
His breath—coals will it kindle,
And a flame from his mouth will go.
In his neck force shall lodge,
And before him terror shall run.
The flaps of his flesh have stuck [fast];
Solid upon him, it cannot be shaken:
His heart [is] solid like a stone,
Even solid like [the] under mill-stone.
From his rising [the] mighty shall fear,
From terrors they shall stray.
[One] hitting him [with the] sword, it will not at all stand [the shock]—
Lance, dart, or mail:
He will regard as straw, iron;
As rotten wood, copper:
The bow-shot cannot make him flee,
To chaff have sling-stones been changed for him:
Like chaff clubs have been regarded [by him],
And he will laugh at the brandishing of the javelin.
Under him [are] points [as] of pottery,
He will strew [his spiked belly like] a threshing-sledge upon [the] mud:
He will cause [the] deep to boil like the pot,
[The] sea he will make like the unguent-kettle:
Behind him he will illuminate a path;
[One] would regard [the] main as hoary.
[There is] not upon [the] dust his ruler—
The [one] made without dismay:
Everything lofty will he behold—
He, [the] king over all the sons of pride [i. e. larger beasts].

This description is in the main strikingly applicable to animals of the alligator tribe, although highly colored in the poetic style. Yet, as observed with regard to the associated animal (see BEHEMOTH), the phraseology is perhaps rather intended generically for large amphibious monsters of the saurian or lizard family, than for any one creature distinctively; a conclusion that is confirmed by the employment of the Heb. term leviathan to other animals of the fishy and reptile kinds. Indeed, as in the case of the hippopotamus, despite the formidable attributes ascribed to the beast in question by the writer in Job, it appears to have been attacked without much fear by the ancients; and although held sacred in some parts of Egypt, where it is especially found, in other nomes it was hunted successfully (Wilkinson, Anc. Eg. i, 241 sq.). The crocodile, however, is apparently elsewhere definitely referred to in Scripture by other names, especially as the reed-beast (Psa. lxviii, 31; see Schramm, De bestia arundineti, F. ad O. 1713). See RAHAB.

Crocodile (Crocodilus Vulgaris).

"The crocodiles, constituting the order Loricata among reptiles, are distinguished pre-eminently by the character noticed in Holy Writ. They are clothed on the entire upper parts of the body with distinct series of bones, imbedded in the substance of the skin, and for the most part furnished with a ridge or crest, which greatly augments their strength, and constitutes the whole a coat of plate-mail which is able to resist the assaults of the most powerful enemy. The structure of the skull is remarkably solid, and it is surmounted by bony crests. There is a single row of teeth in each side of each jaw, locking into each other. The gape is enormous; the lips are altogether wanting, so that the teeth are visible when the mouth is closed; hence the animal, even when tranquil, seems to be grinning with rage. The tongue is fleshy, flat, but free only at the extreme edge, the inferior surface being adherent to the chin and throat; hence the crocodile has been erroneously represented as tongueless.

"All the species of this order are of huge size: not Rhodes, an exploit which Schiller has celebrated in his 'Kampf mit dem Drachen,' must be regarded as a combat with a crocodile, which had probably been carried northward by the regular current of the eastern Mediterranean; for so the picture still extant in the harem of a Turkish inhabitant represents the Hayawán Kebér, or Great Beast—a picture necessarily painted anterior to the expulsion of the knights in 1480. As De Bozon died Grand Master of the Order at Rhodes in 1353, and the spoils of the animal long remained hung up in a church, there is not, we think, any reason to doubt the fact, though most of the recorded circumstances may be fabulous. See DRAGON. All the ancient Greek and the later Mediterranean dragons, as those of Naples, Arles, etc., where they are not allegorical or fictitious, are to be referred to the crocodile" (Kitto, s. v.). See LIZARD.

Crocodilopŏlis (κροκοδείλων πόλις), the name of a town in Syria, situated near a river of the same name (Crocodilon flumen, between Cæsarea Palæstinæ and Ptolemais (Strabo, xvi, p. 758; Pliny, v, 17, 19). Reland (Palæst. p. 739) thinks the latter may have been the same with the SHIHOR-LIBNATH (q. v.) of Josh. xix, 26. It is now identified with the Nahr Zerka (Raumer, Palast. p. 53, 191), in which crocodiles have been found (Pococke, Travels, ii, 58; Thomson, Land and Book, ii, 244).

Croes, JOHN, D.D., Protestant Episcopal bishop of New Jersey, was born June 1, 1762, and ordained in 1790. Having previously acted as lay reader in the P. E. church of Swedesborough, N. J., he became its rector in 1792. He was a prominent member in the Convention of New Jersey for forty years. In 1801 he became rector of Christ Church, New Brunswick, and of St. Peter's Church, Spotswood. In 1811 he was made D.D. by Columbia College, and in 1815 was chosen bishop of New Jersey, having declined the episcopate of Connecticut. From the time of his consecration he observed a system of annual visitations, and his last public act was an ordination in Christ Church, New Brunswick. He died July 26, 1832. He published several charges to his clergy, and a sermon on The Duty and the Interest of contributing liberally to the Promotion of Religious and Benevolent Institutions.—Sprague, Annals, v, 378.

Croft, GEORGE, D.D., an English divine, was born at Skipton, Yorkshire, in 1747; admitted at University College, Oxford, in 1762, was elected scholar in 1768, and fellow in 1779. In the same year he became vicar of Arncliffe, Yorkshire; in 1791, lecturer of St. Martin's, Birmingham, and finally rector of Thwing in 1802. He died in 1809. He wrote Thoughts concerning the Methodists and the Established Clergy (London, 1795, 8vo):—Eight Sermons preached in 1786 (Oxf. 1786, 8vo):—Sermons preached before the University of Oxford (Birming. 1811, 2 vols. 8vo).—Darling, Cyclopædia Bibliographica, s. v.

Crofton, ZACHARY, a learned Nonconformist in the seventeenth century, was born and educated in Dublin. He obtained the living of Wrensbury, Cheshire, but, being a zealous Royalist during the Commonwealth, and refusing the engagement, he was deprived. He afterwards obtained the living of St. Botolph, Aldgate, London. He was ejected for nonconformity in 1662, and died in 1672. He published The Saint's Care for Church Communion (Lond. 1671, sm. 8vo):—Altar Worship (Lond. 1661, 24mo).—Darling, Cyclopædia Bibliographica, s. v.

Croisiers, ORDER OF. See CROSS, ORDER OF.

Croly, GEORGE, LL.D., an English divine and writer, was born in Dublin, August, 1780, and educated at Trinity College. After his ordination he went to London, and spent some years as a writer for the newspaper press. In 1835 he was appointed rector of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, and he occupied that parish with great credit, both as preacher and pastor, up to the day of his death, Nov. 24, 1860. Dr. Croly wrote several extravagant novels and tragedies, among them Salathiel, Marston, and Catiline. His better reputation rests upon his fidelity and power as a preacher, after his appointment to St. Stephen's, and upon his religious writings, the more important of which are, Divine Providence, or the three Cycles of Revelation (Lond. 1834, 8vo):—The Apocalypse: Prophecy of the Rise, Progress, and Fall of the Church of Rome (3d ed., Lond. 1838, 8vo):—The Popish Primacy, 2 sermons (Lond. 1850, 8vo):—Sermons (1848, 8vo). He also wrote a Life of Burke and a Life of George IV, both reprinted in America.

Crombie, ALEXANDER, LL.D., was born at Aberdeen in 1760, and was educated at Marischal College. He became pastor of a Presbyterian congregation in London, and kept a private school at Highgate, and afterwards at Greenwich, with distinguished success. He died in 1842. His principal works are, Natural Theology, or Essays on the Existence of the Deity, etc. (Lond. 1829, 2 vols. 8vo):—Gymnasium, sive Symbola Critica, 5th ed. 1834, 2 vols. 8vo; abridged, 1836, 12mo): A Defence of Philosophical Necessity (1793, 8vo).—Darling, Cyclopædia Bibliographica, s. v.

Cromlech, a huge flat and oblong stone, placed in a sloping position, and supported by pillars of unhewn and perpendicular stones. There were many of them at one time in Ireland, and they are supposed to have been Druidic altars for sacrifice. Their massiveness has defied the ravages of time and revolutions, while the simplicity of their structure bespeaks for them a high antiquity. There is one of them yet in Glansworth, Ireland, which forms a chamber of 25 feet long and 6 feet wide. Mr. Moore (History of Ireland) says that remotely they were called in Irish "Bothals, houses of God." The Druids in ancient Ireland had no temples. Instead of them, on a hill, in an oaken grove, and, if possible, near a flowing stream, they enclosed a circle, having a diameter of 70 or 100 feet, and in the centre of it raised the cromlech, around which, on certain days, the people marched, and always in the direction of the sun. See DRUIDS; ALTAR.

Crook-backed (גִּבֵּן, gibben', gibbous), a hunch-backed or deformed person (Lev. xxi, 21). See BLEMISH.

Crop (מְרָאָה, murah', implying full feeding), the craw of a bird (Lev. i, 16). See SACRIFICE.

Crosier (or CROZIER), properly an archbishop's staff, terminating at the top in a floriated cross, as shown in the subjoined illustration of archbishop Warham's crosier (1520) in the cathedral of Canterbury, England. It is gilt, sometimes even of gold. The term crosier is also applied to the bishop's staff, which is surmounted by a crook or curved circular head. This "pastoral staff," in the Roman Church, is carried before bishops, abbots, and abbesses as an ensign, expressive of their dignity while they are exercising the functions of their office, and the figure of which is also found in their coat of arms. The origin of the crosier is the shepherd's crook, the bishops being regarded as the pastors of their dioceses. By degrees this humble emblem became greatly adorned, and was made of costly materials. Some suppose the crosier to have been originally only a simple staff, which, from the earliest times, was given to judges, kings, etc., as an emblem of authority. St. Isidore says bishops bear the staff because it is their duty to correct the erring and to support the weak.

and some have supposed that a kind of seat was placed, on which the sufferer may be said to have in some way sat. The controversy is treated at length in the first of the four Hypomnemata de Cruce of Bartholinus (Hafn. 1651, Amst. 1670, L. B. 1695).

A common tradition assigns the perpetual shiver of the aspen to the fact of the cross having been formed of its wood. Lipsius, however (De Cruce, iii, 13), thinks it was of oak, which was strong enough, and common in Judæa. Few will attach any consequence to his other reason, that the relics appear to be of oak. The legend to which he alludes,

> "Pes crucis est cedrus, corpus tenet alta cupressus, > Palma manus retinet, titulo lætatur oliva"
> (The foot is cedar, cypress forms the shaft,
> The arms are palm, the title olive bears), hardly needs refutation. It must not be overlooked that crosses must have been of the meanest and readiest materials, because they were used in such marvellous numbers. Thus we are told that Alexander Jannæus crucified 800 Jews (Josephus, Ant. xiii, 14, 2), and Varus 2000 (ib. xvii, 10, 10), and Hadrian 500 a day; and Titus so many that "room failed for the crosses, and crosses for the bodies" (Josephus, War, vi, 28, where Reland rightly notices the strange retribution, "so that they who had nothing but 'crucify' in their mouth were therewith paid home in their own bodies," Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err. v, 21). In Sicily, Augustus crucified 600 (Orosius, vi, 18).—Kitto, s. v.; Smith, s. v. See CRUCIFIXION.

CROSS, BULL OF THE (Cruzada), a bull by which pope Calixtus III, in 1487, granted very extensive indulgences to all who would take up arms, under king Henry of Castile, against the infidels, or pay to that king a certain sum for defraying the expenses of the war. The indulgence was at first granted for only five years, but was from time to time renewed and enlarged, so as to include many privileges, such as exemption from the commandment of abstinence. The proceeds of the Bull of the Cross constituted a considerable portion of the public revenue. The last renewal of the bull is of the year 1753. A similar bull was issued in 1514 by pope Leo, in favor of king Sebastian of Portugal, to whom, in consideration of his endeavors for the conversion of infidels in Africa, the third part of the tithes and the tenth part of the taxes due to the churches and ecclesiastical benefices of the kingdom was conceded.—Wetzer u. Welte, Kirchen-Lex. vi, 265.

CROSS, EXALTATION OF THE, a festival in the Roman Catholic Church, instituted in commemoration of the exaltation of the supposed cross of Christ at Jerusalem, after its recovery from the Persians. The latter, when conquering Jerusalem in 614, carried off with them the relic which, since its "invention" [see CROSS, CHRIST'S] by the empress Helena, had been venerated as the "Holy Cross." With a view to a heavy sum of ransom, they had it sealed up by the patriarch Zacharias with the patriarchal seal, and took it to a strong castle in Armenia. When, in 627, the emperor Heraclius conquered the Persians, he stipulated in the treaty of peace for the restoration of the Holy Cross, and took it with him to Constantinople. From there, in 629 (according to others in 630), he took it himself, accompanied by a large retinue, to Jerusalem, where it was again set up with great solemnities. It is this restoration of the cross to Jerusalem which is annually commemorated on Sept. 14 in the Church of Rome as the Exaltation of the Cross.—Wetzer u. Welte, Kirchen-Lex. vi, 268.

CROSS, INVENTION OF THE, the name given in the Roman Catholic Church to a festival which commemorates the finding of the alleged true cross of our Saviour, and which is celebrated on the 3d of May. An order of friars, founded in honor of the invention of the cross, and carrying in their hand a staff, on the top of which was a cross, received the name of Croisiers (Fr. croix, cross), corrupted into Crouched or Crutched Friars. They came to England in the 13th century, and had monasteries in London, Oxford, and Ryegate. The festival of the Elevation of the Cross (September 14) commemorates its re-erection in Jerusalem by the emperor Heraclius, after it had been carried away by the Persians.—Chambers, Encyclopædia, s. v. See CROSS, EXALTATION OF.

CROSS, METAPHORICAL SENSE OF. This word (1), in its most comprehensive sense, as figuratively used in N. T., designates not only the whole passion of Christ, culminating in the death on the cross, but also the whole Gospel system, as a means of reconciliation with God through Christ. (2) It is also used to designate the sufferings and trials sent upon Christians for their moral improvement, and which have the effect of strengthening faith, and teaching humility, love, and submission. The command to "take up the cross" daily (Luke ix, 23) signifies that we are cheerfully to submit to all the evils of life, circumstance, and position, which God, in his wisdom, sees fit that we should encounter; we are even to rejoice at misfortune, as the discipline of suffering brings fruits of sanctification to those who patiently submit for Christ's sake, remembering that all things work for good to them that love God (Rom. viii, 28). Four kinds of "crosses" have been recognised: 1, the cross of martyrdom, the witness unto death for Christ and the Gospel; 2, the cross of trials, for the preservation of faith, love, and hope; 3, the cross of discipline, for the purification of the heart and the subjection of sinful desires and inclinations; 4, the cross of punishment, for the chastisement of sin; though the aim of punishment also is the improvement of the sinner. God is love, and therefore lays the "cross" on every one as he needs it. He chasteneth whom he loveth. It is a sad mistake to consider suffering as the result of caprice or anger on the part of God (2 Cor. iv, 16–18; xii, 7; Heb. xii, 1-12; Gal. vi, 14; Eph. ii, 16, 17; Col. i, 19–22; 1 Cor. i, 17, 18; Gal. v, 11; Phil. iii, 18).—Krehl, N. T. Handwörterbuch, s. v. Kreuz.

CROSS, ORDERS OF THE, in the Roman Church. 1. Canons Regular of the Congregation of the Holy Cross, founded in 1211 by Theodore de Celles, a descendant of the dukes of Bretagne. It was confirmed by Innocent IV in 1248, and was exempted from the jurisdiction of the bishops by John XXII in 1318. The order spread especially in the Netherlands, Western Germany, and France, and still exists in the Netherlands and Belgium, whence in 1850 a colony was sent over to the United States, where they have an establishment in the diocese of Milwaukee. See Helyot, who calls them Croisiers or Porte-Croix; American Catholic Almanac. 2. Croisiers (Cross-bearers) of Italy, another congregation of the same order, the origin of which is unknown, but which was renewed by pope Alexander III in 1169, and is now extinct. 3. Croisiers of Bohemia, see KNIGHTS, TEUTONIC. 4. Daughters of the Cross, founded by Madame de Villeneuve, in France, in 1640, under the direction of Vincent de Paul, and confirmed by pope Clement IX. They devote themselves principally to the instruction of girls, and have their principal establishment, with more than 100 members, at Paris. The order is rapidly increasing in France, and has one establishment in the United States, in the diocese of Natchitoches, founded in 1854.—Fehr, Geschichte der Mönchsorden, ii, 319. 5. Another congregation of Daughters of the Cross was founded in 1835 at Liege, by Habets, a Belgian priest. They teach, keep asylums for fallen women, etc., and have established several houses in Belgium and Germany.—Fehr, Geschichte der Mönchsorden, ii, 322. 6. Sisters of the Cross, also called "Sisters of St. Andrew," founded in 1806 by Mademoiselle Bechier, in the diocese of Poitiers. They devote themselves to the instruction of children, and to the nursing of the sick in the country. They are very numerous in France. 7. Another congregation of Sisters of the Cross, also called "Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary," was founded by Abbé Moreau, at Mans, about 1834, and approved by the pope in 1857. They came to the United States in 1843, and have establishments in the dioceses of Fort Wayne, Philadelphia, and Chicago. 8. A Congregation of Regular Clerks of the Holy Cross was founded in 1835, together with the congregation mentioned under No. 7, by Abbé Moreau. It was afterwards united with the "Brothers of St. Joseph," founded about the same time by Very Rev. Mr. Dujarier, and the rule of the united congregations was approved by Pius IX in 1857. They had, in 1867, 82 houses and missions, of which 58 were in France, 12 in America, 7 in Bengal, 2 in Algeria, and 1 each in Rome, Poland, and Austria.

CROSS, SIGN OF THE, a rite in the Roman Church, and in the Greek and other Eastern churches. It is used by officiating priests as a form of blessing at all liturgical actions and consecrations, and by all the members of the Church at the beginning of a prayer during divine service, on entering a church, on passing the host, and on many other occasions. It is always made with the right hand. In the 6th century it became customary to make the sign of the cross with the thumb on forehead, mouth, and chest. Since the 8th century the so-called "large" or "Latin" cross has been in common use among the laity. It is made with the palm of the hand by touching first the forehead; next, in direct line downward, the chest; next, in horizontal line, the left and the right shoulder. The same form of cross is used in liturgical actions, if the cross is to be made over the object to be blessed without touching it. While among the Latins the cross beam is drawn from the left to the right, the reverse is the case among the Greeks and Russians. In making the sign of the cross, it is common to pronounce the words, "In the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Amen." Formerly there were also other forms in common use (Binterim enumerates eight), but all have been displaced by the above. The different ways of making the sign of the cross, and the number of fingers used, have called forth in the Church of Rome the most fanciful and mystical significations, and a special power has commonly been attributed to the sign of the cross. It is, therefore, also made over water, salt, oil, etc. In the Greek Church the sign of the cross is of even more frequent use than in the Roman Catholic. Among the Protestants it is almost universally abandoned (in the Lutheran Church of Saxony it was in use until the introduction of a new liturgy in 1812). In the Church of England and in the Protestant Episcopal Church its use in baptism is optional.

CROSS, WAY OF THE (Via Crucis), the collective name of a certain number of pictures or stations in or near Roman Catholic churches and sanctuaries, to represent an equal number of events in the history of the Passion of the Saviour. Generally the number of the pictures is 14 or 15, but sometimes less. The people who "walk the way of the cross" stop a little while at each picture, reciting a prayer, until they have, in turn, visited every station, and thus completed the commemoration of the Passion. In some Roman Catholic countries, as in Southern Germany, the "Way of the Cross" can be met with in almost every church. This practice was invented by the Franciscan monks, who offered it to the people as a substitute for the pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and justly calculated that, by obtaining numerous indulgences from the popes for those who would adopt this peculiar kind of worship, they would achieve a great popularity for the churches of their order. Their expectation was realized. The popes granted to the visitors of the "Way of the Cross" all the indulgences which had formerly been granted to the visitors of different places in the Holy Land, thus enabling the people to gain in a few minutes several "plenary" indulgences, besides a number of partial. Every "Way of the Cross" must be instituted by a Franciscan monk, and it requires a special permission from the pope if any one who is not a Franciscan is to introduce it. Many special books of devotion have been published for the Via Crucis.

Cross-bearer (cruciger). 1. In the Romish Church, the designation of the chaplain of an archbishop, or a primate, who bears a cross before him on solemn occasions. The pope has the cross borne before him everywhere; a patriarch anywhere out of Rome; and primates, metropolitans, and those who have a right to the pallium, throughout their respective jurisdictions. A prelate wears a single cross, a patriarch a double cross, and the pope a triple cross on his arms.

2. The name cross-bearers ("cruciferi") was also applied to the Flagellants in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. See FLAGELLANTS.

Croswell, Henry, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born in West Hartford, Conn., June 16, 1778. While quite young he entered his brother's printing-office in Catskill, N. Y., and soon became editor of a newspaper published in that place. About 1800 he established a paper at Hudson, N. Y., called The Balance. He removed to Albany in 1809, where his paper attained a still wider circulation and influence. Finally he turned his attention to the Christian ministry. Though brought up among Congregationalists, he determined to unite with the Protestant Episcopal Church, and prepared to enter its ministry. In the year 1811 he was ordained deacon. After preaching a short time in Hudson, he removed to New Haven, when he took charge of Trinity Church, and in February, 1816, he was ordained priest. He remained in the same parish 43 years. It is stated that in a period of 41 years he officiated at 1844 burials, administered 2553 baptisms, and married 833 couples. He died March 13, 1858.

Croswell, William, D.D. (son of Henry), was born in Hudson, N. Y., Nov. 7, 1804, and graduated at Yale College in 1822. After studying at the General Theol. Seminary, N. Y., he was ordained in 1828, and in May, 1829, he accepted the rectorship of Christ Church, Boston. In 1840 he became rector of St. Peter's Church, Auburn, N. Y., but, after somewhat more than four years, he returned to Boston, and connected himself with a new enterprise—the Church of the Advent, which proved very successful. With this church he continued till the close of his life. In 1846 the degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Trinity College, Hartford, and on Nov. 9, 1851, he died suddenly, after the partial delivery of a beautiful sermon, addressed to the children of his church, in connection with a baptism. His productions, especially on poetry, were published soon after his death by his father, in an extended Memoir, but he had strictly forbidden the publication of any of his sermons.—Sprague, Annals, v, 697.

Crothers, Samuel, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born near Chambersburg, Pa., October 22, 1783. His father removed to Lexington, Ky., in 1787. In February, 1798, he entered the Lexington Academy, and in 1804 placed himself under the care of the Kentucky Presbytery as a candidate for the ministry. He entered the New York Theological Seminary in 1805, and, returning to Kentucky in 1809, was there licensed to preach. He settled in Chillicothe in 1810, where he remained for three years, removing to Greenfield in 1813. At this time the Associate Reformed Church was greatly agitated with controversies respecting intercommunion and psalmody. With Dr. Mason and most of his students, Mr. Crothers opposed close communion, and the exclusive use of what has been called inspired psalmody. Troubles growing out of these things, he resigned his charge, and removed to Winchester, Ky. In 1820 he returned to Greenfield, where he remained 36 years. He died suddenly in Oswego, Ill., at the house of his son, on July 20, 1856.—Wilson, Presbyterian Hist. Almanac, 1864.

Crowell, Joshua, an early Methodist Episcopal minister in New England, was born in Massachusetts in 1777, of Presbyterian parents, was converted through the agency of Methodist preaching at about 20, entered the itinerancy in 1801, located in 1809, and died at Sturbridge, Mass., July, 1858, in the fifty-seventh year of his ministry. He had a strong intellect, sound judgment, generous emotions, and an earnest love of Methodism. He was an able and successful minister. He was one of the founders of the Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, and in many ways was of eminent service to the Church.—Sherman, Sketches of New-England Divines, p. 389.

Crowell, Seth, a Methodist Episcopal minister of more than ordinary talents, was born in Tolland, Conn., in 1781, entered the New York Conference in 1801, was returned superannuated in 1813, re-entered upon work as a missionary in 1816, located in 1819, and was readmitted as superannuated in 1824. He died in 1826 in New York city.—Minutes, i, 542; Stevens, Memorials of Methodism, ii, ch. xviii.

Crowther, Jonathan, an English Methodist minister, was born in Cornwall, July 31, 1794, and was educated at Kingswood School. He began to preach in 1814, was appointed head-master at Kingswood 1823, and afterwards at Woodhouse-Grove. He afterwards served several circuits, until he was called in 1837 to the superintendency of Wesleyan missions in India. His labors in that country brought great and lasting good to the missions, especially in Madras. In 1843 he returned to England, and in 1849 was appointed classical tutor at the Wesleyan Theological School, Didsbury, where he remained until his death, Jan. 11, 1856.—Wesleyan Minutes, 1856, p. 21.

Crown, an ornament often mentioned in Scripture, and in such a manner as in most cases to indicate the circumstances under which and the persons by whom it was worn; for crowns were less exclusively worn by sovereigns than among modern nations. Perhaps it would be better to say that the term "crowns" was applied to other ornaments for the head than those exclusively worn by royal personages, and to which modern usage would give such distinctive names as coronet, band, mitre, tiara, garland, etc. This ornament, which is both ancient and universal, probably originated from the fillets used to prevent the hair from being dishevelled by the wind. Such fillets are still common, and they may be seen on the sculptures of Persepolis, Nineveh, and Egypt; they gradually developed into turbans (Josephus, Ant. iii, 7, 7), which, by the addition of ornamental or precious materials, assumed the dignity of mitres or crowns. The use of them as ornaments was probably suggested by the natural custom of encircling the head with flowers in token of joy and triumph ("Let us crown ourselves with rosebuds," Wisd. ii, 8; 3 Macc. vii, 16; Jud. xv, 13, and the classical writers, passim). See Wreath. The first crown was said to have been woven for Pandora by the Graces (comp. στέφανος Χαρίτων, Prov. iv, 9). According to Pherecydes, Saturn was the first to wear a crown; Diodorus says that Jupiter was first crowned by the gods after the conquest of the Titans. Pliny, Harpocration, etc., ascribe its earliest use to Bacchus, who gave to Ariadne a crown of gold and Indian gems, and assumed the laurel after his conquest of India. Leo Ægyptius attributes the invention to Isis, whose wreath was cereal. These and other legends are collected by Tertullian from the elaborate treatise on crowns by Claud. Saturninus. Another tradition says that Nimrod was the first to wear a crown, the shape of which was suggested to him by a cloud (Eutychius Alexandr. Ann. i, p. 63). Tertullian, in his tract De Cor. Militis (c. vii sq.), argues against them as unnatural and idolatrous. He is, however, singularly unsuccessful in trying to disprove the countenance given to them in Scripture.

1. The word נֵזֶר, ne'zer (lit. consecration; hence consecrated hair, as of a Nazarite, and then generally long hair), is supposed to denote a diadem (Greek διάδημα, Rev. xii, 3; xiii, 1; xix, 12). It is applied to the inscribed plate of gold in front of the high-priest's mitre, which was tied behind by a ribbon (Exod. xxix, 6; xxxix, 30), and which was doubtless something of the same kind that we see in figs. 8, 11. This word is also employed to denote the diadem which Saul wore in battle, and which was brought to David (2 Sam. i, 10), and also that which was used at the coronation of the young Joash (2 Kings xi, 12); and, as another word is applied elsewhere to the crown used in this ceremonial, the probability is that the Hebrew kings wore sometimes a diadem and sometimes a crown, and that the diadem only was accessible to the high-priest, by whom Joash was crowned, the crown itself being most likely in the possession of Athaliah. Both the ordinary priests and the high-priest wore head-dresses of this ornamental description. The common mitre (מִגְבָּעוֹת, Sept. κίδαρις, Exod. xxviii, 37; xxix, 6, etc.; Josephus, ταινία; Hesych. στρόφιον ὃ οἱ ἱερεῖς φοροῦσι) was a flat cap (πῖλος ἄκωνος), forming a sort of linen tænia or crown (στεφάνη), Josephus, Ant. iii, 7. The ceremonial mitre (מִצְנֶפֶת, Sept. βυσσίνη τιάρα) of the high-priest (used also of a regal crown, Ezek. xxi, 26) was much more splendid (Exod. xxviii, 36; Lev. viii, 9; "an ornament of honor, a costly work, the desire of the eyes," Ecclus. xlv, 12; "the holy crown," Lev. viii, 9, so called from the Tetragrammaton inscribed on it, Sopranes, De re Vest. Jud., p. 441). It had a second fillet of blue lace (ἐξ ὑακίνθου πεποικιλμένος, the color being chosen as a type of heaven), and over it a golden diadem (נֵזֶר, Exod. xxix, 6), "on which blossomed a golden calyx like the flower of the ὑοσκύαμος," or hyoscyamus (Josephus, Ant. iii, 6). The gold band (צִיץ, Sept. πέταλον; Origen, ἱλαστήριον) was tied behind with blue lace (embroidered with flowers), and being two fingers broad, bore the inscription (not in bas-relief, as Abarbanel says) "Holiness to the Lord." (Comp. Rev. xvii, 5; Braunius, De Vest. Sacerd. ii, 22; Maimon. De Apparatu Templi, ix, 1; Reland, Antiq. ii, 10; Carpzov, Appar. Crit. p. 85; Josephus, War, v, 5, 7; Philo, De Vit. Mosis, iii, 519.) Some suppose that Josephus is describing a later crown given by Alexander the Great to Jaddua (Jennings's Jewish Ant. p. 158). The use of the crown by priests and in religious services was universal, and perhaps the badge belonged at first "rather to the pontificalia than the regalia." Thus Q. Fabius Pictor says that the first crown was used by Janus when sacrificing. "A striped head-dress and queue," or "a short wig, on which a band was fastened, ornamented with an asp, the symbol of royalty," was used by the kings of Egypt in religious ceremonies (Wilkinson's Anc. Egypt. iii, 354, fig. 13). The crown worn by the kings of Assyria was "a high mitre . . . frequently adorned with flowers, etc., and arranged in bands of linen or silk. Originally there was only one band, but afterwards there were two, and the ornaments were richer" (Layard, ii, 320, and the illustrations in Jahn, Arch. Germ. ed., pt. i, vol. ii, tab. ix, 4 and 8). See Mitre.

Ancient Assyrian Crowns.
Fig. 1, Early Kings; 2, Later.

The royal crown originated in the diadem, which was a simple fillet fastened round the head, and tied behind. This obviously took its rise among a people who wore long hair, and used a band to prevent it from falling over the face. The idea occurred of distinguishing kings by a fillet of different color from that usually worn; and being thus established as a regal distinction, it continued to be used as such even among nations who did not wear the hair long, or was employed to confine the head-dress. We sometimes see this diadem as a simple fillet, about two inches broad, fastened round the otherwise bare head; we then find it as a band of gold (first cut, above, figs. 2, 5). In this shape it sometimes forms the basis of raised ornamental work (figs. 6, 7, 8, 10), in which case it becomes what we should consider a crown; and, indeed, the original diadem may be traced in most ancient crowns. Fig. 10 is curious, not only from the simplicity of its form, but on account of the metallic loop to be passed under the chin—a mode of securing the crown probably adopted in war or in the chase. Then we find the diadem surrounding the head-dress or cap (figs. 3, 9, 13), and when this also is ornamented, the diadem may be considered as having become a crown. See DIADEM.

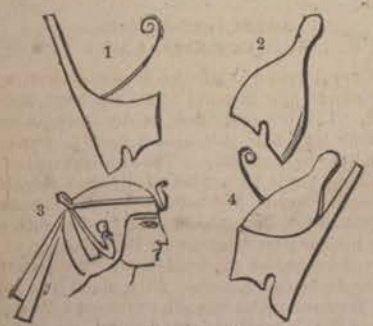
2. The more general word for a crown is עֲטָרָה, atarah' (a circlet; Gr. στέφανος); and it is applied to crowns and head ornaments of different sorts, including those used by the kings. When applied to their crowns, it appears to denote the state crown as distinguished from the diadem. Such was probably the crown, which, with its precious stones, weighed (or rather "was worth") a talent, taken by David from the king of Ammon at Rabbah, and used as the state crown of Judah (2 Sam. xii, 30). Some groundlessly suppose that, being too heavy to wear, it was suspended over his head. The royal crown was sometimes buried with the king (Schickard, Jus Reg. vi, 19, p. 421). Idolatrous nations also "made crowns for the head of their gods" (Ep. Jer. 9). The Rabbins allege that the Hebrew state-crown was of gold, set with jewels. Of its shape it is impossible to form any notion, unless by reference to the examples of ancient crowns contained in the preceding cut. These figures, however, being taken mostly from coins, are not of that very remote antiquity which we would desire to illustrate matters pertaining to the period of the Hebrew monarchies. In Egypt and Persia there are sculptures of earlier date, representing royal crowns in the shape of a distinguishing tiara, cap, or helmet, of metal, and of cloth, or partly cloth and partly metal.



Ancient Egyptian Crowns.

Fig. 1, Lower Egypt; 2, Upper Egypt; 4, both kingdoms united; 3, Royal Fillet.

The diadem of two or three fillets (figs. 4, 5, first cut, above) may have been similarly significant of dominion over two or three countries. In Rev. xii, 3; xiii, 1; xix, 12, allusion is made to "many crowns" (διαδήματα) worn in token of extended dominion. Thus the kings of Egypt used to be crowned with the "pshent," or united crowns of Upper and Lower Egypt (Wilkinson, Anc. Egypt. iii, 351 sq.; comp. Layard, ii, 320); and Ptolemy Philometor wore two diadems, one for Europe and one for Asia. This would, in fact, form three crowns, as his previous one was doubtless the double crown of Upper and Lower Egypt. Similarly the three crowns of the papal tiara mark various accessions of power: the first corona was added to the mitre by Alexander III in 1159; the second by Boniface VIII. in 1303; and the third by Urban V in 1362. These Egyptian tiaras were worn in war and on occasions of state, but on ordinary occasions a fillet or diadem was used. It is important to observe that the mitre of the high-priest, which is also called a crown (Exod. xxxix, 30), was of similar construction, if not shape, with the addition of the golden fillet or diadem.

3. Similar also in construction and material, though not in form, was the ancient Persian crown, for which there is a distinct name in the book of Esther (i, 11; ii, 17; vi, 8), viz., כֶּתֶר, ke'ther (chaplet), which was doubtless the cidaris or citaris (κίδαρις or κίταρις), the high cap or tiara so often mentioned by the Greek historians. From the descriptions given of it, this seems to have been a somewhat conical cap, surrounded by a wreath or fold; and this would suggest a resemblance to fig. 12 (of the first cut, above), which is, in fact, copied from a Parthian or later Persian coin. This one is worthy of very particular attention, because it forms a connecting link between the ancient and modern Oriental crowns, the latter consisting either of a cap, with a fold or turban, variously enriched with aigrettes, as this is; or of a stiff cap of cloth, studded with precious stones. It must often occur to the student of Biblical antiquities that the modern usages of the East have more resemblance to the most ancient than have those which prevailed during that intermediate or classical period in which its peculiar manners and institutions were subject to much extraneous influence from the domination of the Greeks and Romans. So, in the present instance, we are much impressed with the conviction that such head-tires and caps as those represented in the above cut more correctly represent the regal "crowns" of the Old Testament than those figured in the first cut, above (with the exception of fig. 12 and the simple diadems); which, however, may be taken to represent the style of the crowns which prevailed in and before the time of the New Testament. See TURBAN.

Modern Oriental Crowns.

4. Other Heb. terms rendered "crown" are זֵר, zer, a wreath or border of gold around the edge of the ark of the covenant (Exod. xxv, 11, etc.); and קָדְקֹד, kodkód', the scalp or crown of the human head (Gen. xlix, 26, etc.; κορυφή, Bel, 36). There are several words in Scripture for a crown (but not so rendered) besides those mentioned, as פְּאֵר, peër', the head-dress of bridegrooms (Isa. lxi, 10; Bar. v, 2; Ezek. xxiv, 17), and of women (Isa. iii, 20); צְפִירוֹת, tsephiroth', a head-dress of great splendor (Isa. xxviii, 5); לִוְיָה, liveyah', a wreath of flowers (Prov. i, 9; iv, 9); such wreaths were used on festal occasions (Isa. xxviii, 1); צָנִיף, tsaniph', a common tiara or turban (Job xxix, 14; Isa. iii, 23); כַּרְבְּלָא, karbela' ("hat," Dan. iii, 21, rather mantle). Στέμμα occurs in the N. T. only once (Acts xiv, 13) for the garlands used with victims. In the Byzantine court this word was in the warmest regions. Theophrastus (54) reckons crystal among the pellucid stones used for engraved seals. In common parlance we apply the term crystal (as the ancients apparently did) to a glass-like transparent stone, commonly of a hexagonal form, which, from being found in rocks, is called by mineralogists rock-crystal. It is a stone of the flint family, the most refined kind of quartz" (Kitto). See GLASS.

Cubit (in Heb. אַמָּה, ammah', lit. mother, i. e. of the arm, the fore-arm; Greek πῆχυς, an ell) is a word derived immediately from the Latin cubitus, the lower arm. The length of the cubit has varied in different nations and at different times. Derived as the measure is from a part of the human body, and as the human stature has been of very dissimilar length, the cubit must of necessity have been various. The lower arm, moreover, may take in the entire length from the elbow to the tip of the third or longest finger, or it may be considered as extending from the elbow merely to the root of the hand at the wrist, omitting the whole length of the hand itself. If the definition of Celsus (viii, 1) is taken, and the cubit is identified with the ulna, the under and longer of the two bones of which the arm consists, still a fixed and invariable measure is not gained. That the cubit among the Hebrews was derived as a measure from the human body is clear from Deut. iii, 11—"after the cubit of a man" (אַמַּת אִישׁ, see Böttcher, Proben alttest. Schrift. p. 288). But it is difficult to determine whether this cubit was understood as extending to the wrist or the end of the third finger. As, however, the latter seems most natural, since men, when ignorant of anatomy, and seeking in their own frames standards of measure, were likely to take both the entire foot and the entire fore-arm, the probability is that the longer was the original cubit, namely, the length from the elbow to the extremity of the longest finger. The Egyptian cubit, which it is likely the Hebrews would adopt, consisting of six hand-breadths, is found on the ruins of Memphis (Journal des Savans, 1822, Nov., Dec.; comp. Herod. ii, 149). The Rabbins also (Mishna, Chelim, xvii, 9) assign six hand-breadths to the Mosaic cubit. By comparing Josephus (Ant. iii, 6, 5) with Exod. xxv, 10, it will, moreover, be found that the weight of his authority is in the same scale. According to him, a cubit is equal to two spans. Now a span is equal to three hand-breadths (Schmidt, Bibl. Mathemat. p. 117; Eisen-Schmidt, De Ponderibus, p. 110); a cubit, therefore, is equal to six hand-breadths. The hand-breadth is found as a measure in 1 Kings vii, 26; comp. Jer. lii, 21. In the latter passage the finger-breadth is another measure. The span also occurs Exod. xxviii, 16. So that, it appears, measures of length were, for the most part, borrowed by the Hebrews from members of the human body. Still no absolute and invariable standard presents itself. If the question, What is a hand or finger-breadth? be asked, the answer can be only an approximation to fact. If, however, the palm or hand-breadth be taken at 3½ inches, then the cubit will amount to 21 inches. In addition to the common cubit, the Egyptians had a longer one of six palms four inches. The Hebrews also have been thought to have had a longer cubit, for in Ezek. xl, 5, we read of a cubit which seems to be an ordinary "cubit and an hand-breadth;" see also Ezek. xliii, 13, where it is expressly said, "the cubit is a cubit and an hand-breadth." The prophet has been supposed to refer here to the then current Babylonian cubit, a measure which it is thought the Jews borrowed during the period of their captivity. The Rabbins make a distinction between the common cubit of five hand-breadths and the sacred cubit of six hand-breadths—a distinction which is held to be insufficiently supported by De Wette (Archäologie, p. 178). Consult Lamy, De Tabernaculo, c. 8; Carpzov, Apparat. p. 676.—Kitto, s. v. An ancient Egyptian cubit now in the Royal Museum of Paris measures 20.484 inches. The Hebrew cubit, according to Bishop Cumberland and M. Pelletier, is twenty-one inches; and the Talmudists observe that the Hebrew cubit (meaning probably the longer or sacred measure) was larger by one quarter than the Roman, which would make it contain 21.843 inches. Many writers fix it at eighteen inches, confounding it with the Greek and Roman measure of a foot and a half. The most approved computation assigns each kind of Jewish cubits the same length as the corresponding Egyptian, namely, 20.24 inches for the ordinary one, and 21.888 for the sacred, which is confirmed by the mean length of several ancient cubits marked on the Egyptian monuments (Wilkinson's Anc. Egyptians, 2d series, i, 30), by a comparison of the dimensions of the Pyramids with those given in ancient authorities (Vyse's Pyramids of Gizeh, iii, 104, 105), and which we shall find to correspond remarkably with the Talmudical statement of the circuit of the Temple. In a later edition of his Ancient Egyptians, however ("Popular Account," ii, 258), Wilkinson makes the ordinary Egyptian cubit to have consisted of seven palms or twenty-eight digits, and gives nine exact computations of its length, varying from 20.4729 to 20.7484 inches, which yield an average of 20.6169 inches; and he states the cubit on the Nilometer at Elephantine, from actual measurement, to be 20.625 inches. This last is perhaps the most accurate dimension attainable for the standard cubit. (See Böckh, Metrol. Untersuch. Berl. 1838, p. 12; Thenius, in the Stud. u. Krit. 1846, i, 770; ii, 299; Lepsius, Die alt-ägyptische Elle, Berl. 1865.) See METROLOGY.

In Judg. iii, 16, the term translated "cubit" is in the original גֹּמֶד, go'med (literally, a cut), a rod or staff, as the measure of a cubit. In the New Testament our Lord characteristically employs the term cubit (Matt. xxvii, 6; Luke xii, 25) for the enforcement of a moral and spiritual lesson. The term also occurs in John xxi, 8, and in Rev. xxi, 17; and in the Apocrypha (2 Macc. xiii, 5). See MEASURE.

Cucius. See KAUTZ.

Cuckoo (שַׁחַף, shach'aph, prob. from its leanness; Sept. and Vulg. sea-gull; A.V. "cuckow") occurs only in Lev. xi, 16; Deut. xiv, 15, among birds of prey not clearly identified, but declared to be unclean. None of the various ancient or modern versions of this word give a bird possessing any affinity with the other species enumerated; and although the cuckoo is a winter and spring bird, distinctly heard, it appears, by Mr. Buckingham, early in April, while crossing the mountains between Damascus and Sidon, at that time covered with snow, it could scarcely deserve to be included in the prohibited list, for the species is everywhere scarce. The identifications proposed by late writers on the subject all equally lack a sufficient foundation. Bochart (Hieroz. vol. ii, c. 18) thinks the sea-gull is meant. Upon the whole, while so much obscurity still remains on the subject, the interpretation of "cuckoo" may as well remain undisturbed. (See Penny Cyclopædia, s. v.) The word shachaph was a good imitation of the dissyllabic voice of this bird, as our word cuckoo, variously repeated in all European languages, and yakoob, which the bird is supposed by the Arabs to utter. The latter, indeed, call it tir el-Yakûb, or "Jacob's bird," on this account (Kitto, Phys. Hist. of Palest. p. ccccliii). The common cuckoo (Cuculus canorus) is a bird of considerable size, unfit for food, because habitually feeding on reptiles and large insects. It is spread over the whole of Asia and Africa as well as Europe, migrating northward in spring, and probably not breeding in Palestine, although passing the winter there. The American cuckoo (Erythiophrys Americanus), often called "cow-bird," is a different species of the family of the Cuculinæ, all the members of which are distinguished by laying their eggs in the nests of other birds, and rearing no young themselves.—Kitto, s. v.; Fairbairn, s. v.

Cucumber is the translation of קִשֻּׁא, kishshu' (so called probably from its difficulty of digestion; Sept. σίκυος), in our Auth. Vers., and the correctness of this rendering has been almost universally admitted. It occurs in Num. xi, 5, where the Israelites, when in the desert, express their longings for the melons and the cucumbers of Egypt. The Heb. is so similar to the Arabic kissa that there can be very little doubt of their both meaning the same thing. Celsus (Hierobot. ii, 247) gives keta, kati, and kusaia as different pronunciations of the same word in different Oriental languages. It does not follow that these names always indicate exactly the same species, since in the different countries they would probably be applied to the kinds of cucumber most common, or perhaps to those which were most esteemed in particular localities. Thus, in Egypt (see Prosp. Alpin, Plantt. Æg. c. 38, p. 54), the name kati appears to be applied to the species which is called Cucumis chate by botanists, and "queen of cucumbers" by Hasselquist, who describes it as the most highly esteemed of all those cultivated in Egypt (Trav. p. 258). See Mélon. In India the name kissa is applied by the Mohammedans to the Cucumus utilissimus, or the common kukree of the natives, while in Persia and Syria the same name would probably be applied only to the common cucumber, or Cucumis sativus, as the two preceding species are not likely to be much known in either country. The Talmudists (Maaser. i, 4; Terumoth, ii, 6; vi, 6; Baba Mez. vii, 5) have קִשּׁוּת, and the Phœnicians had the word Κουσίμεζαρ (Diosc. iv, 152), which is probably קִשֻּׁא מִצְרִי, "cucumber of Egypt" = σίκυος ἄγριος. The same name for cucumber exists in all cognate languages. (For an account of the cucumbers of Syria and Egypt, see Forskal, Flora Ægypt. p. 169; Celsii Hierobot. ii, 249.) See Botany.

All travellers in the East notice the extensive cultivation and consumption of cucumbers and other vegetables of the same tribe, especially where there is any moisture of soil, or the possibility of irrigation (see Burckhardt, Arabic Proverbs, No. 660). Thus, even in the driest parts, the neighborhood of a well is often occupied by a field of cucurbitaceous plants, generally with a man or boy set to guard it from plunder, perched up on a temporary scaffolding, with a slight protection from the sun, where he may himself be safe from the attacks of the more powerful wild animals. That such plants appear to have been similarly cultivated among the Hebrews is evident from Isa. i, 8, "The daughter of Zion is left like a cottage in a vineyard, like a lodge in a garden of cucumbers" (מִקְשָׁה, mikshah', Sept. σικυήρατον), as well as from Baruch vi, 70, "as a scarecrow in a garden of cucumbers (σικυήρατον) keepeth nothing, so are their gods of wood."—Kitto. See Garden; Cottage.

Cud (גֵּרָה, gerah', rumination), the pellet of half-chewed food brought up from the first stomach of ruminant animals to be thoroughly masticated (Lev. xi, 3–7, 26; Deut. xiv, 6–8). See Clean (animals).

Cudworth, Ralph, an eminent English divine and philosopher, was born at Aller, Somersetshire, in 1617, and entered Emmanuel College, Cambridge, in 1630, became M.A. 1639, rector of N. Cadbury 1641, and master of Clare Hall 1644. In 1645 he became professor of Hebrew; in 1654, master of Christ Col-Culon (Κουλόν v. r. Κουλόμ, Jerome Caulon), the fifth named of the group of eleven cities added by the Septuagint to those in the mountains of Judah (between ver. 59 and 60 of Josh. xv); thought to be the modern Kulonieh, a trace of which appears in the notice of the Crusades (Wilken, Gesch. der Kreuz. iv, 509), a village with ruins about 1½ h. W. of Jerusalem towards Jaffa (Van de Velde, Memoir, p. 305); but, as this lay beyond the border of Judah (Schwarz, Palest. p. 118), the authenticity of the names in the Sept. being, moreover, dubious (Wilson, Bible Lands, ii, 266 n.), the place perhaps only represents some station or Colonia of the Romans (Robinson, Later Res. p. 158).

Culverwell, NATHANIEL, M.A., a pious and learned writer. He was fellow of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and died about 1650. We have of him an Elegant and learned Discourse on the Light of Nature (on Prov. xx, 27), with several other treatises (Lond. 1661, 4to). The Light of Nature abounds in striking thoughts, and has passages of rare eloquence.

Cumanus, VENTIDIUS, procurator of Judæa immediately next to Alexander (a short time after Fadus), and partly in conjunction with Felix (q. v.), B.C. 49–53; under his administration the commotions broke out that led eventually to the final war with the Romans (Josephus, Ant. xx, 5, 2 and 3; 6, 1–3; War, ii, 12, 1–7).

Cumberland, RICHARD, D.D., bishop of Peterborough, a learned divine and archæologist, was born in London in 1632, and was educated at St. Paul's School, and Magdalen College, Cambridge. He was made rector of Brampton, and in 1667 vicar of All Hallows, Stamford. In 1691 he was raised to the see of Peterborough without any solicitation on his part. He was previously known by his treatise De Legibus Naturæ (Lond. 1672, 4to), in answer to Hobbes, and by his Essay on Jewish Weights and Measures (London, 1686, 8vo). He was indefatigable in performing his episcopal duties. Being advised, on account of his age and infirm state, to relax a little, he replied, "It is better to wear out than rust out." After his death appeared his Origines Gentium (Lond. 1724, 8vo), and his translation of Sanchoniatho's Phœnician History (London, 1720, 8vo). At the age of eighty-three, Dr. Cumberland, having been presented by Dr. Wilkins with a copy of his Coptic Testament, then just published, commenced, like another Cato, the study of Coptic. "At this age," says Mr. Payne, "he mastered the language, and went through great part of this version, and would often give me excellent hints and remarks as he proceeded in reading of it." He died Oct. 9, 1718. Cumberland's theory of morals is set forth in his treatise De Legibus Naturæ. Tendency to effect the general good is made the standard of morality. To endeavor to effect the greatest amount of general good is the one great duty, or the one great "law of nature;" and we know, according to Cumberland, that it is a duty or law of nature, or law of God, because we know that an individual derives the greatest happiness from the exercise of benevolence, and that God desires the greatest possible happiness of all his creatures. Carrying out the fundamental principle that the greatest general good is to be sought, he deduces the several particular duties or particular "laws of nature." He founds government upon, and tests it by the same principle. An abridged translation of the work was published by Tyrrel in 1701. Maxwell, an Irish clergyman, published a translation in 1727; Barbeyrac published a French version in 1744. A third English translation, by the Rev. John Towers, D.D., appeared in 1750. On Cumberland as a moralist, see Mackintosh, Hist. of Ethical Philosophy, p. 70; Whewell, Hist. of Moral Philosophy, p. 52.

Cu'mi (κοῦμι), a mode of Græcizing the Heb. imperative קוּמִי (ku'mi), signifying rise, as it is immediately explained (Mark v, 41).

Cumin (כַּמּוֹן, kammon', lit. a condiment, from its use; Greek κύμινον; and names of similar sound in all the Oriental dialects) is an umbelliferous plant, mentioned both in the Old and New Testaments, and, like the dill and the coriander, continues to be cultivated in modern as it was in ancient times in Eastern countries (Pliny, xix, 47). These are similar to and used for many of the same purposes as the anise and caraway, which supply their place, and are more common in Europe. All these plants produce fruits, commonly called seeds, which abound in essential oil of a more or less grateful flavor, and warm, stimulating nature; hence they were employed in ancient as in modern times both as condiments (Pliny, xix, 8; Apicius, i, 32; iii, 18; Polyæn. iv, 3, 32) and as medicines (Mishna, Shabb. xix, 2). A native of Upper Egypt and Ethiopia, it is still extensively cultivated in Sicily and Malta. It would appear to have been a favorite herb among the Hebrews, and as late as the last century it retained a place of some importance in pharmacy (see Ehrmann, De cumino, Argent. 1733). Cumin is first mentioned in Isaiah (xxviii, 25): "When he (the ploughman) hath made plain the face thereof, doth he not cast abroad the fitches, and scatter the cumin?" showing that it was extensively cultivated, as it is in the present day, in Eastern countries, as far even as India. In the south of Europe it is also cultivated to some extent. In the above chapter of Isaiah (ver. 27) cumin is again mentioned: "For the fitches are not threshed with a threshing instrument, neither is a cart-wheel turned about upon the cumin; but the fitches are beaten out with a staff, and the cumin with a rod." This is most applicable to the fruit of the common cumin, which, when ripe, may be separated from the stalk with the slightest stroke, and would be completely destroyed by the turning round of a wheel, which, bruising the seed, would press out the oil on which its virtues depend (see Dioscor. iii.

Cumin (Cuminum Cyminum), with enlarged view of the Flower, Capsule, and semisection of the last.

Modern Oriental Cups.

of liquid. It is of porcelain or Dutch-ware, and, being without a handle, is placed within another cup (called zarf) of silver or brass, according to the circumstances of the owner, and both in shape and size nearly like an egg-cup. In a full service there are ten fingans and zarfs of uniform kinds, and often another fingan and zarf of a superior kind for the master of the house or for a distinguished guest. In the accompanying sketch, the coffee-pot (bekreg or bakrag) and the zarfs and tray are of silver, and are represented on a scale of one eighth of the real size. Below this set are a similar zarf and fingan, on a scale of one fourth, and a brass zarf, with the fingan placed in it. Some zarfs are of plain or gilt silver filigree, and a few opulent persons have them of gold. Many Moslems, however, religiously disallow all utensils of gold and of silver (Lane, Mod. Eg. i, 205). See CUP-BEARER.

Modern Oriental Coffee-service.

The practice of divining by means of a cup (גָּבִיעַ, gabi'a, Gen. xliv, 2-17; a goblet, distinguished from the preceding or smaller cups used in drinking; rendered "pot" in Jer. xxxv, 5; spoken of the calix-form "bowls" of the golden candlestick, Exod. xxv, 31-34; xxxviii, 17-20) was a practice of great antiquity in the East. We read in early Persian authors of the mystical cup of Jemshid (Bonomi, Nineveh, 3d ed. p. 306), which was imagined to display all the occurrences on the face of the globe (Tieroff, De Scypho Josephi, Jen. 1657; Tittel, id. Tor. 1727). See DIVINATION. The bronze cup, with the sacred beetle engraved in the bottom, found by Layard among the ruins of Nimroud, may have been used for such a purpose (Nineveh and Babylon, p. 157). Κόνδυ, the word used in Gen. by the Sept., occurs in Hipparchus (ap. Athen. p. 478, A), and is curiously, like the Indian kundi, a sacred Indian cup (Boblen on Gen. p. 403; Kalisch, Comment. p. 673). In Isa. xxii, 24, the word translated "cup" is אַגָּן (aggan', literally a trough for washing garments), and signifies a laver or basin (as it is rendered in Exod. xxiv, 6; "goblet," Cant. vii, 2). The "cup of trembling" (סַף, saph, elsewhere "basin" or "bowl") signifies a broad convex dish, such as is easily made to rock or vibrate. The "cups" referred to in 1 Chron. xxviii, 17, were the כָּסָוֹת (kesavoth'), or broad bowls for libation (elsewhere improperly rendered "covers," Exod. xxv, 29; xxxviii, 16; Num. iv, 7). Such vessels appear in the hands of the Assyrian king on the monuments, apparently in festive or religious drinking after public exploits (Bonomi, Nineveh, p. 252). In the Apocrypha we find the sacred vessels of Jehovah called σπονδεῖα, goblets (1 Esd. ii, 13. "In their cups" 1 Esd. iii, 22, is a rendering for ὅταν πίνωσι, when they drink). See BASIN; BOWL; DISH; VASE; VIAL, etc.

"The word 'cup' is used in both Testaments in some curious metaphorical phrases. Such are the cup of salvation (Psa. cxvi, 13), which Grotius, after Kimchi, explains as 'poculum gratiarum actionis,' a cup of wine lifted in thanksgiving to God (comp. Matt. xxvi, 27). That it alludes to a paschal libation cannot be proved; and that it was understood by the Jews to be expressive of gratitude we may see from 3 Macc. vi, 27, where the Jews offer 'cups of salvation' in token of deliverance. In Jer. xvi, 7 we have the term 'cup of consolation,' which is a reference to the wine drunk at the περιδεῖπνα, or funeral feasts of the Jews (2 Sam. iii, 35; Prov. xxxi, 6; Joseph. War, ii, 1). In 1 Cor. x, 16, we find the well-known expression 'cup of blessing' (ποτήριον τῆς εὐλογίας), contrasted (ver. 21) with the 'cup of devils.' The sacramental cup is called the cup of blessing because of the blessing pronounced over it (Matt. xxvi, 27; Luke xxii, 17; see Lightfoot, Hor. Hebr. in loc.). No doubt Paul uses the expression with a reference to the Jewish 'cup of blessing' (כּוֹס שֶׁל בְּרָכָה), the third of the four cups drunk by the Jews at their Paschal feast (Schöttgen, Hor. Hebr. in 1 Cor.; Jahn, Bibl. Arch. § 353), but it is scarcely necessary to add that to this Jewish custom our Lord, in his solemn institution of the Lord's Supper, gave an infinitely nobler and diviner significance (Buxtorf, De Sacrâ Cenâ, § 46, p. 310). Indeed, of itself, the Jewish custom was liable to abuse, and similar abuses arose even in Christian times (Augustine, Serm. cxxxii, de tempore; Carpzov, App. Critic, p. 380 sq.). See PASSOVER. In Psa. xi, 5; xvi, 5, 'the portion of the cup' is a general expression for the condition of life, either prosperous or miserable (Psa. xxiii, 5). A cup is also in Scripture the natural type of sensual allurement (Jer. li, 7; Prov. xxiii, 31; Rev. xvii, 4; xviii, 6). See BANQUET.

"But in by far the majority of passages, the cup is a 'cup of astonishment,' a 'cup of trembling,' the full red flaming wine-cup of God's wrath and retributive beautiful figure of Isa. liv, 2 (where "habitations" should be "tabernacles," מִשְׁכְּנוֹת, poetic word for "tents"); Jer. iv, 20; x, 20 (here "tabernacle" and "tent" are both one word, אֹהֶל, tent); Psa. civ, 2 (where "stretch," נָטָה, is the word usually employed for extending a tent). Also specially of nomadic people, Jer. xlix, 29; Hab. iii, 7 (of the black hair-cloth of which the tents of the real Bedouin are still composed); but Cant. i, 5 rather refers to the hangings of the palace. See TENT.

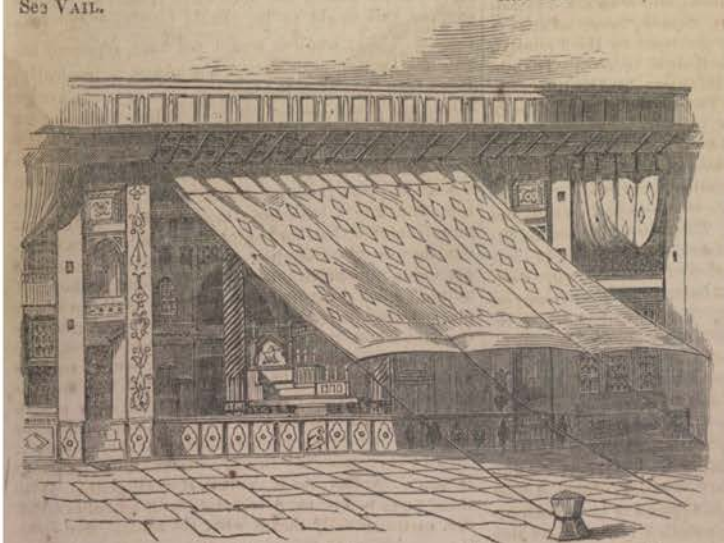
2. מָסָךְ, masak', the "hanging" for the doorway of the tabernacle (Exod. xxvi, 36, 37; xxxv, 15; xxxvi, 37; xxxix, 38; xl, 5; Num. iii, 25; iv, 25); and also for the gate of the court round the tabernacle (Exod. xxvii, 16; xxxv, 17; xxxviii, 18; xxxix, 40; xl, 33; Num. iii, 26; iv, 26). Among these the rendering "curtain" occurs but once (Num. iii, 26), while "hanging" is shared equally between masak and a very different word—קְלָעִים, kelaí'. See HANGING. Besides "curtain" and "hanging," masak is rendered "covering" in Exod. xxxv, 12; xxxix, 34; xl, 21; Num. iv, 5; 2 Sam. xvii, 19; Psa. cv, 39; Isa. xxii, 8. The idea in the root of masak seems to be of shielding or protecting (סָכַךְ, Gesenius, Thes. Heb. p. 951). If this be so, the object denoted may have been not a curtain or veil, but an awning to shade the entrances—a thing natural and common in the fierce sun of the East (see Fergusson's Nineveh and Persepolis, p. 184).—Smith, s. v. See TABERNACLE. The sacred curtain separating the holy of holies from the sanctuary is designated by an entirely different term, פָּרֹכֶת, pero'keth (Exod. xxvi, 31 sq.; Lev. xvi, 2; Num. xviii, 7, etc.). See VAIL.



Awning before the Throne-room at Teheran.

3. דַּק, dok (prop. fineness), fine cloth for a garment, specially a curtain, apparently a tent-covering of superior fineness (Isa. xl, 22), such as the rich Orientals spread for a screen over their courts in summer (Henderson, in loc.). See COURT.

Curtius, VALENTIN, a prominent Lutheran minister of the sixteenth century, was born at Lebus Jan. 6, 1493. He studied at the University of Rostock, and early entered the order of Franciscans. He was one of the earliest adherents of the Reformation of Luther, and became its leader, first in the city of Rostock, and subsequently in that of Lubeck. In 1554 he was appointed superintendent of all the churches of Lubeck, and in this position exercised a most beneficent influence upon the religious life of the city. He also took a prominent part in many of the theological conferences of the Lutheran Church. Thus he was present at the "convent of Brunswick" in 1557, which was to settle the adiaphoristic controversies, and in 1561 at the "convent of Luneburg," when the "Luneburg Articles" were drawn up, which were incorporated with the symbolical books of Brunswick. Curtius is also the author of the so-called "Lubeck Formula" (Formula consensus, etc.), which he drew up in concert with the secular authorities and the entire clergy of the city. By it the ministers pledge themselve to abide by the doctrine of the prophets and the apostles, the Apostolic Creed, the Augsburg Confession, the Apology, and the Articles of Schmalkald. It was signed by Curtius and all the other ministers of Lubeck in 1560, and afterwards by all ministers appointed in Lubeck until 1683, when the signing of it was no longer required. Curtius also drew up, in the name of the clergy, a "Protestatio contra Synodum Tridentinam." He died Nov. 28, 1573.—Herzog, Real-Encykl. xix, 373; Starke, Lüb. Kirch-Hist. (Hamburg, 1724, 2 vols., where both the "Formula Consensus" and the Protestatio are printed).

Cusa, NICHOLAS DE, or CUSANUS, a cardinal of great learning. His name was properly NICHOLAS KHRYPFFS (KREBS), but he was named Cusanus or De Cusa from Cues on the Mosel, where he was born in 1401. He was the son of a poor fisher, who wished him to learn the same trade. Rather than comply with this request, Nicholas left the paternal home, and found employment with the count of Manderscheid, who, having discovered the eminent talent of his servant, sent him to the school of the Brothers of Common Life at Deventer, and subsequently to the University of Padua. At the age of 23 Nicholas became doctor of law, but when he lost his first lawsuit he left the profession of law for the study of theology. Possessing a thorough knowledge of the Greek, Latin, and Hebrew languages, and a rare degree of eloquence, he soon attracted attention. After holding several ecclesiastical benefices at St. Wendel and Coblentz, he was present as archdeacon of the cathedral church of Liege at the Council of Basel, where he presented to the assembled bishops the celebrated work De Concordantia Catholica. This is one of the ablest works published during the Middle Ages in favor of the opinion that the pope is subordinate to an œcumenical council; it attacks the pretended donation of Constantine, and the authority of the false decretals, and insists on the reformation of the Church and the Germanic empire. Cusa was opposed to the dissolution of the council which was attempted by Eugene IV, and showed himself favorable to the reforms which the council decreed. But soon after he left the reformatory party and became an adherent of the pope, who added him to the legation which was sent over to Constantinople to dissuade the Greeks from going to Basel, and to induce them to go to Ferrara. After the rupture between the pope and the council, Cusa accompanied the papal legate, Thomas de Sarzana, on his missions to Germany and France. When the latter became pope, under the name of Nicholas V, Cusa was made a cardinal (1449), and bishop of Brixen, in the is intended between the two kinds of cymbals mentioned in Psa. cl, 5, צִלְצְלֵי שָׁמַע, "loud cymbals," and צִלְצְלֵי תְרוּעָה, "high-sounding cymbals." "The former probably consisted of four small plates of brass or of some other hard metal; two plates were attached to each hand of the performer, and were smitten together to produce a loud noise. The latter consisted of two larger plates, one held in each hand, and struck together as an accompaniment to other instruments.

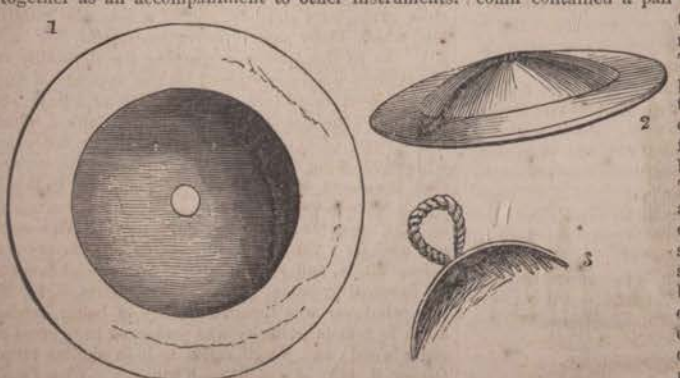
Ancient Cymbals.—From Herculaneum.



Ancient Egyptian Cymbals (5½ inches in diameter).—From the British Museum.

Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun, the renowned conductors of the music of the sanctuary, employed the 'loud cymbals' possibly to beat time, and to give the signal to the choir when it was to take part in the sacred chant" (Smith). The ancient Egyptians likewise had cymbals and cylindrical maces (crotala, or clappers), two of which were struck together, and probably emitted a sharp metallic sound. The cymbals were of mixed metal, apparently brass, or a compound of brass and silver, and of a form exactly resembling those of modern times, though smaller, being only seven, or five inches and a half in diameter. The handle was also of brass, bound with leather, string, or any similar substance, and being inserted in a small hole at the summit, was secured by bending back the two ends. The same kind of instrument is used by the modern inhabitants of the country, and from them have been borrowed the very small cymbals played with the finger and thumb, which supply the place of castanets in the almeh dance. These were the origin of the Spanish castanet, having been introduced into that country by the Moors, and afterwards altered in form, and made of chestnut (castaña) and other wood instead of metal. The cymbals of modern Egypt (see Descr. de l'Egypte, xiii, 496 sq.) are chiefly used by the attendants of sheiks' tombs, who travel through the country at certain periods of the year to exact charitable donations from the credulous or the devout among the Moslems by the promise of some blessing from the indulgent saint. Drums and some other noisy instruments, which are used at marriages and some other occasions, accompany the cymbals, but these last are more peculiarly appropriated to the service of the sheiks, and the external ceremonies of religion, as among the ancient Egyptians; and a female, whose coffin contained a pair of cymbals, was described in the hieroglyphics of the exterior as the minstrel of a deity. The cylindrical maces, or clappers, were also admitted among the instruments used on solemn occasions, and they frequently formed part of the military band, or regulated the dance. They varied slightly in form, and some were of wood or of shells; others of brass, or some sonorous metal having a straight handle, surmounted by a head or other ornamental device. Sometimes the handle was slightly curved, and double, with two heads at the upper extremity; but in all cases the performer held one in the once populous and fertile district of which it was the ornament, has been almost lost to civilization. During three parts of the year the place is tenanted by wild animals of the desert, and during the fourth part the wandering Bedouins pitch their tents on the low grounds in its neighborhood.—Smith, Dict. of Class. Geog. s. v.; Penny Cyclopædia, s. v. Cyrenaica, Cyrene; Rawlinson's Herodotus, iii, 108 sq.

Coins of Cyrene, bearing the sacred Silphium Plant (which was the chief article of export).

Strabo (quoted by Josephus, Ant. xiv, 7) says that in Cyrene there were four classes of persons, namely, citizens, husbandmen, foreigners, and Jews, and that the latter enjoyed their own customs and laws (comp. Dio Cass. lviii, 32). Ptolemy, the son of Lagus, introduced them, because he thought they would contribute to the security of the place (Joseph. c. Apion. ii, 4). They became a prominent and influential class of the community (Ant. xiv, 7, 2), and they afterwards received much consideration from the Romans (xvi, 6, 5). See 1 Macc. xv, 23; comp. 2 Macc. ii, 23. We learn from Josephus (Life, 76) that soon after the Jewish war they rose against the Roman power. The notices above given of the numbers and position of the Jews in Cyrene (confirmed by Philo, who speaks of the diffusion of the Jews southward to Ethiopia, adv. Flacc. p. 523) prepare us for the frequent mention of the place in the N. T. in connection with Christianity. Simon, who bore our Saviour's cross (Matt. xxvii, 32; Mark xv, 21; Luke xxiii, 26), was a native of Cyrene. Jewish dwellers in Cyrenaica were in Jerusalem at Pentecost (Acts ii, 10). They even gave their name to one of the synagogues in Jerusalem (vi, 9). Christian converts from Cyrene were among those who contributed actively to the formation of the first Gentile church at Antioch (xi, 20), and among those who are specially mentioned as laboring at Antioch, when Barnabas and Saul were sent on their missionary journey, is Lucius of Cyrene (xiii, 1), traditionally said to have been the first bishop of his native district. Other traditions connect Mark with the first establishment of Christianity in this part of Africa. See AFRICA.

Cyre'nian (Κυρηναῖος, Cyrenæan, "of Cyrene," Matt. xxvii, 32; Acts xi, 20; xiii, 1), a native of Cyrene (q. v.) or Cyrenaica, in Africa (Mark xv, 21; Luke xxiii, 26; Acts vi, 9).

Cyre'nius (Græcized Κυρήνιος, Luke ii, 2; see Deyling, Obss. ii, 431 sq.), for the Latin Quirinus (prob. not Quirinius; see Meyer, Comment. in loc.). His full name was PUBLIUS SULPICIUS QUIRINUS (see Sueton. Tiber. 49; Tacit. Ann. ii, 30). He is the second of that name mentioned in Roman history (see Smith, Dict. of Class. Biog. s. v.), and was consul with M. Valerius Messala, B.C. 12. From the language of Tacitus (Ann. iii, 48), it would appear that he was of obscure origin, a supposition apparently favored by

(i. e. a Slavonic) people, who seem to have dwelt, or perhaps rather roved, along the Oxus, from Bokhara to Khiva; and that, after alternate successes in battle, he attached the whole nation to himself in faithful allegiance. Their king is called Amorges by Ctesias. They are undoubtedly the same people that Herodotus (vii, 64) calls Amyrgian Sacians; and it is highly probable that they gave to the district of Margiana its name. Their women fought in ranks as systematically as the men. Strabo has cursorily told us of a tradition (xv, 2, p. 307) that Cyrus escaped with but seven men through the deserts of Gedrosia, fleeing from the "Indians"—which might denote an unsuccessful war against Candahar, etc., a country which certainly was not reduced to the Persian empire until the reign of Darius Hystaspis.

The closing scene of the career of Cyrus was in battle with a people living on one or both banks of the river Iaxartes, now the Syr-deria. Herodotus calls the enemy the Massagetans, who roamed along the north bank of the river; according to Ctesias it was the Derbices, who seem to have been on the south. Both may, in fact, have combined in the war. In other respects the narrative of Ctesias is beyond comparison more credible, and more agreeable with other known facts, except that he introduces the fiction of Indians with elephants aiding the enemy. Two battles were fought on successive days, in the former of which Cyrus was mortally wounded, but was carried off by his people (B.C. 529, according to Clinton). In the next, the Sacian cavalry and the faithful Amorges came to support him, and the Derbices sustained a total and bloody defeat. Cyrus died the third day after his wound: his body was conveyed to Pasargadæ, and buried in the celebrated monument, which was broken open by the Macedonians two centuries afterwards (Strabo, xv, 3). A description is given of the tomb in Arrian (vi, 29): it was a neat quadrangular edifice, with a low door leading into a little chamber, in which lay a golden sarcophagus, containing the body of Cyrus. The inscription, reported by Aristobulus, an eye-witness, is this: "O man, I am Cyrus, who acquired the empire for the Persians, and was king of Asia. Grudge me not, then, this monument." It is generally supposed to have perished, but Sir R. K. Porter has sought to identify it with an extant building known by the natives as that of "the mother of Suleiman" (Travels, i, 498). His name is found on monuments at Murghab, north of Persepolis (Höck, Vet. Med. N. Pers. Monum.).

Supposed Tomb of Cyrus.

5. Conduct and Relations of Cyrus towards the Jews.—Hitherto the great kings, with whom the Jews had been brought into contact, had been open oppressors or seductive allies; but Cyrus was a generous liberator and a just guardian of their rights. An inspired prophet (Isa. xliv, 28) recognised in him "a shepherd" of the Lord, an "anointed" king (Isa. xlv, 1; מָשִׁיחַ, Messiah); and the title seemed to later writers to invest him with the dignity of being in some sense a type of Christ himself (Jerome, Comm. in Isa. xlv, 1). His successes are connected in the prophecy with their religious issue; and if that appear to be a partial view of history which represents the restoration of a poor remnant of captive Israelites to their own land as the final cause of his victories (Isa. xliv, 28-xlv, 4), it may be answered that the permanent effects which Persia has wrought upon the world can be better traced through the Jewish people than through any other channel. The laws, the literature, the religion, the very ruins of the material grandeur of Persia have passed away, and still it is possible to distinguish the effects which they produced in preparing the Jews for the fulfilment of their last mission. In this respect, also, the parallel, which has already been hinted, holds good. Cyrus stands out clearly as the representative of the East, as Alexander afterwards of the West. The one led to the development of the idea of order, and the other to that of independence. Ecclesiastically the first crisis was signalized by the consolidation of a Church, the second by the distinction of sects. The one found its outward embodiment in "the great synagogue," the other in the dynasty of the Asmonæans.

The kings of Assyria and Babylon had carried the Jews into captivity, both to remove a disaffected nation from the frontier, and to people their new cities. By *un*doing this work, Cyrus attached the Jews to himself as a garrison at an important post. But we may believe that a nobler motive conspired with this. The Persian religion was primitively monotheistic, and strikingly free from idolatry; so little pagan in its spirit that, whatever of the mystical and obscure it may contain, not a single impure, cruel, or otherwise immoral practice was united to any of its ceremonies. It is credible, therefore, that a sincere admiration of the Jewish faith actuated the noble Persian when he exclaimed, in the words of the book of Ezra, "Go ye up and build in Jerusalem the house of Jehovah, God of Israel; he is God!"—and forced the Babylonian temples to disgorge their ill-gotten spoil. It is the more remarkable, since the Persians disapproved the confinement of temples. Nevertheless, impediments to the fortification of Jerusalem afterwards arose, even during the reign of Cyrus (Ezra iv, 5). See CAPTIVITY.

Perhaps no great conqueror ever left behind him a fairer fame than Cyrus the Great. His mighty achievements have been borne down to us on the voice of the nation which he elevated; his evil deeds had no historian to record them. What is more, it was his singular honor and privilege to be the first Gentile friend to the people of Jehovah in the time of their sorest trouble, and to restore them to the land whence light was to break forth for the illumination of all nations. To this high duty he is called by name by the prophet (Isa. xliv, 28; xlv, 1), and for performing it he seems to be entitled "the righteous man" (xli, 2; xlv, 13). There are also important passages in Jeremiah (xxv, 12; xxix, 10; xxiii, 7-13) that predict the same event, without mentioning the name of Cyrus as the agent. The corresponding history is found in the books of Daniel and Ezra. The language of the proclamation in Ezra i, 2, and 2 Chron. xxxvi, 22, seems to countenance the idea that he was by Kimchi, and is admitted by most modern scholars. It is also supported by the analogies of other fish deities among the Syro-Arabians (see Herod. ii, 72; Ælian, Anim. x, 46; xii, 2; Xenoph. Anab. i, 4, 9; Strabo, xvii, 812; Diod. Sic. ii, 4; Cicero, Nat. Deor. iii, 15; comp. Münter, Rel. d. Karth. p. 102; Movers, Phöniz. p. 491 sq.; Creuzer, Symbol. ii, 78 sq.). Besides the ATERGATIS (q. v.) of the Syrians (which was the female counterpart of Dagon), the Babylonians had a tradition, according to Berosus (Berosi Quæ supersunt, ed. Richter, p. 48, 54), that at the very beginning of their history an extraordinary being, called Oannes, having the entire body of a fish, but the head, hands, feet, and voice of a man, emerged from the Erythræan Sea, appeared in Babylonia, and taught the rude inhabitants the use of letters, arts, religion, law, and agriculture; that, after long intervals between, other similar beings appeared and communicated the same precious lore in detail, and that the last of these was called Odakon (Ὡδάκων). Selden is persuaded that this Odakon is the Philistine god Dagon (De Diis Syris, p. 265), a conclusion in which Niebuhr coincides (Gesch. Assurs, p. 477), but from which Rawlinson dissents (Herod. i, 482). The resemblance between Dagon and Atergatis (q. d. אַדִּיר and דָּג, great fish) or Derketo (which is but an abbreviation of the last name) is so great in other respects that Selden accounts for the only important difference between them—that of sex—by referring to the androgynous nature of many heathen gods. It is certain, however, that the Hebrew text, the Sept., and Philo Byblius (in Euseb. Præp. Ev. i, 10) make Dagon masculine (ὁ Δαγών). The fish-like form was a natural emblem of fruitfulness, and as such was likely to be adopted by seafaring tribes in the representation of their gods. (See Götze, Dissert. de ἰχθυολατρείᾳ, Lips. 1723.)

The most famous temples of Dagon were at Gaza (Judg. xvi, 21-30) and Ashdod (1 Sam. v, 5, 6; 1 Chron. x, 10). The former was employed as a theatre (see Faber, Archäol. i, 444, 436), and was once overthrown by Samson (Judg. xvi). The latter temple was destroyed by Jonathan in the Maccabæan wars (1 Macc. x, 84; xi, 4; Josephus, Ant. xiii, 4, 5). There would also seem to have been a third in the vicinity of Jericho, which was demolished by Ptolemy (Joseph. War, i, 2, 3); and the site of which Schwarz claims (Palest. p. 163) to have discovered in a stream still bearing the name of Duga, or fish-river: it is but a relic of the ancient Doch, or DOCUS (q. v.). Traces of the worship of Dagon likewise appear in the names Caphar-Dagon (near Jamnia), and Beth-Dagon in Judah (Josh. xv, 41), and Asher (Josh. xix, 27). See BETH-DAGON.

Besides the female figure of Atergates, there have lately been discovered among the Assyrian ruins (Botta, pl. 32-35) figures of a male fish-god, not only of the forms given above (Layard, Nineveh, ii, 353), but occasionally with a human form and feet, the fish only covering the back like a cloak (Layard, Babylon, p. 361). Colonel Rawlinson has also deciphered the name dagon on the cuneiform inscriptions (q. v.). See Roser, De Dagone, in Ugolini, Thesaur. xxiii; Sharpe in Bonomi's Nineveh, 3d ed. p. 169.

DAGON'S HOUSE (1 Sam. v, 5), or the HOUSE (1 Sam. v, 2) or TEMPLE OF DAGON (1 Chron. x, 10), בֵּית־דָּגוֹן, i. e. Beth-Dagon, as it is elsewhere rendered (Josh. xv, 41; xix, 27; so Βηθδαγών, 1 Macc. x, 83), or the sanctuary of Dagon, the god of the Philistines, mentioned in Judg. xvi, 23, and other places. See this etymology defended against the older one (which Fürst retains, Heb. Lex. p. 286) in Gesenius, Monument. Phæn. p. 387, and Thesaur. p. 204. In the first two (and possibly also the third) of the above passages, the temple of Dagon, situated in or near Ashdod (as stated under the foregoing article DAGON), is evidently intended; the other collocations of these words [see BETH-] require a fuller elucidation than could well be given in the article BETH-DAGON (q. v.).

1. BETH-DAGON, in Josh. xv, 41, was one of the second group of "sixteen cities with their villages," which the sacred writer places in the lowlands (שְׁפֵלָה) of the tribe of Judah, apparently on the actual plain which stretches westward towards the Philistine coast from "the hill country" so often mentioned. This does not (as in Reland, Palæstina, p. 636) designate a Gederoth-bethdagon, as the name Gederoth occurs alone in 2 Chron. xxviii, 18, with the same description as it has in this place, as one of the cities of the lowlands of Judah. Gesenius and Fürst identify this Beth-dagon with the Caphar-dagon, which in the time of Eusebius was a very large village (κώμη μεγίστη, inter Jamniam et Diospolin) in the neighborhood of Joppa; but modern research has shown that this latter place, of which still remain some traces in Beit-Dejan, a village between Yâfa and Ludd, is considerably above the northern boundary of Judah. Our Beth-dagon, indeed, no longer exists by the same name (Van de Velde's Map of Palestine and Memoir, p. 294). The same must be said of

2. BETH-DAGON, mentioned in Josh. xix, 27, as one of the border cities of the tribe of Asher. Though, however, no modern landmark points out the site of

Map of the Vicinity of Damascus.

Wady Helbon upon the north, and the Awaj upon the south, which flows direct from Hermon, increase the fertility of the Damascene plain, and contend for the honor of representing the "Pharpar" (q. v.) of Scripture. The city stands on the banks of the main stream, about two miles distant from, and 500 feet below the pass through which it emerges into the plain. The modern Oriental architecture does not bear close inspection, but when seen from a distance it is singularly imposing. Tapering minarets and swelling domes, tipped with golden crescents, rise up in every direction from the confused mass of white terraced roofs, while in some places their tops gleam like diamonds amid the deep green foliage. In the centre of the city stands the great mosque, and near it the massive towers of the castle.

2. History.—According to Josephus (Ant. i, 6) Damascus was founded by Uz, the son of Aram, and grandson of Shem. It is first mentioned in Scripture in connection with Abraham, whose steward was a native of the place (Gen. xv, 2). We may gather from the name of this person, as well as from the statement of Josephus, which connects the city with the Aramæans, that it was a Shemitic settlement. According to a tradition preserved in the native writer Nicolaüs, Abraham staid for some time at Damascus after leaving Charran and before entering the promised land, and during his stay was king of the place. "Abraham's name was," he says, "even in his own day, familiar in the mouths of the Damascenes, and a village was shown where he dwelt, which was called after him" (Fragm. 30). This last circumstance would seem, however, to conflict with the notion of Abraham having been king, since in that case he would have dwelt in the capital. In the village of Buzeh, three miles north of the city, is a highly venerated shrine, called for the last eight centuries "the house of Abraham." (On these fables, see Julian, Epist. 24, p. 392; Cellarii Notitiæ, ii, 442 sq.; Mannert, VI, i, 407 sq.; Justin, xxxvi, 2; Isidorus, Origg. xv, 1; D'Herbelot, Biblioth. Or. i, 70.) See ABRAHAM.

Nothing more is known of Damascus until the time of David, when "the Syrians of Damascus came to succor Hadadezer, king of Zobah," with whom David was at war (2 Sam. viii, 5; 1 Chron. xviii, 5). On this occasion David "slew of the Syrians 22,000 men," and in consequence of this victory became completely master of the whole territory, which he garrisoned with Israelites. "David put garrisons in Syria of Damascus; and the Syrians became servants to David, and brought gifts" (2 Sam. viii, 6). Nicolaüs of Damascus said that the name of the king who reigned at this time was Hadad; and he ascribes to him a dominion not only over Damascus, but "over all Syria except Phœnicia" (Fragm. 31). He noticed his attack upon David, and related that many battles were fought between them, the last, wherein he suffered defeat, being "upon the Euphrates." According to this writer, Hadad the first was succeeded by a son, who took the same name, as did his descendants for ten generations. But this is irreconcilable with Scripture (see Müller, Origo regni Damasci Lips. 1714; also in Ikenii Thesaur. i, 721 sq.). It appears that in the reign of Solomon a certain Rezon, who had been a subject of Hadadezer, king of Zobah, and had escaped when David conquered Zobah, made himself master of Damascus, and established his own rule there (1 Kings xi, 23-5). He was "an adversary to Israel all the days of Solomon . . . and he abhorred Israel, and reigned over Syria" (Joseph. Ant. viii, 7, 6). Afterwards the family of Hadad appears to have recovered the throne, and a Benhadad, who is probably Hadad III of Nicolaüs, a grandson of the antagonist of David, is found in league with Baasha, king of Israel, against Asa (1 Kings xv, 19; 2 Chron. xvi, 3), and afterwards in league with Asa against Baasha (1 Kings xv, 20). He made a successful invasion of the Israelitish territory in the reign of that king; and in the reign of Omri he not only captured a number of Israelitish cities, which he added to his own dominions, but even seems to have exercised a species of lordship over Samaria itself, in which he acquired the right of "making himself streets" (1 Kings xx, 34; comp. Nic. D. Fragm. 31, ad fin.). He was succeeded by his son, Hadad IV (the Benhadad II of Scripture, and the Ben-idri of the Assyrian inscriptions), who came at the head of thirty-two subject kings against Ahab, and laid siege to Samaria (1 Kings xx, 1). The attack was unsuccessful, and was followed by wars, in which victory declared itself unmistakably on the side of the Israelites; and at last Benhadad was taken prisoner, and forced to submit to a treaty whereby he gave up all that his father had gained, and submitted in his turn to the suzerainty of Ahab (ib. xx, 13-34). The terms of the treaty were perhaps not observed. At any rate, three years afterwards war broke out afresh, through the claim of Ahab to the city of Ramoth-Gilead (1 Kings xxii, 1–4). The defeat and death of Ahab at that place (ib. 15–37) seems to have enabled the Syrians of Damascus to resume the offensive. Their bands ravaged the lands of Israel during the reign of Jehoram; and they even undertook at this time a second siege of Samaria, which was frustrated miraculously (2 Kings vi, 24; vii, 6–7). After this, we do not hear of any more attempts against the Israelitish capital. The cuneiform inscriptions show that towards the close of his reign Benhadad was exposed to the assaults of a great conqueror, who was bent on extending the dominion of Assyria over Syria and Palestine. Three several attacks appear to have been made by this prince upon Benhadad, who, though he had the support of the Phœnicians, the Hittites, and the Hamathites, was unable to offer any effectual opposition to the Assyrian arms. His troops were worsted in several engagements, and in one of them he lost as many as 20,000 men. It may have been these circumstances which encouraged Hazael, the servant of Benhadad, to murder him and seize the throne, which Elisha had declared would certainly one day be his (2 Kings viii, 15). He may have thought that the Syrians would willingly acquiesce in the removal of a ruler under whom they had suffered so many disasters. The change of rulers was not at first productive of any advantage to the Syrians. Shortly after the accession of Hazael (about B.C. 884), he was in his turn attacked by the Assyrians, who defeated him with great loss amid the fastnesses of Anti-Libanus. However, in his other wars he was more fortunate. He repulsed an attack on Ramoth-Gilead, made by Ahaziah, king of Judah, and Jehoram, king of Israel, in conjunction (2 Kings viii, 28–9); ravaged the whole Israelitish territory east of Jordan (ib. x, 32–3); besieged and took Gath (ib. xii, 17; compare Amos vi, 2); threatened Jerusalem, which only escaped by paying a heavy ransom (2 Kings xii, 18); and established a species of suzerainty over Israel, which he maintained to the day of his death, and handed down to Benhadad, his son (2 Kings xiii, 3–7, and 22). This prince, in the earlier part of his reign, had the same good fortune as his father. Like him, he "oppressed Israel," and added various cities of the Israelites to his own dominion (2 Kings xiii, 25); but at last a deliverer appeared (ver. 5), and Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, "beat Hazael thrice, and recovered the cities of Israel" (ver. 25). In the next reign still further advantages were gained by the Israelites. Jeroboam II (B.C. cir. 836) is said to have "recovered Damascus" (ib. xiv, 28), and though this may not mean that he captured the city, it at least implies that he obtained a certain influence over it. The mention of this circumstance is followed by a long pause, during which we hear nothing of the Syrians, and must therefore conclude that their relations with the Israelites continued peaceable. See BENHADAD. When they reappear, nearly a century later (B.C. cir. 742), it is as allies of Israel against Judah (2 Kings xv, 37). We may suspect that the chief cause of the union now established between two powers which had been so long hostile was the necessity of combining to resist the Assyrians, who at the time were steadily pursuing a policy of encroachment in this quarter. Scripture mentions the invasions of Pul (2 Kings xv, 19; 1 Chron. v, 26), and Tiglath-Pileser (2 Kings xv, 29; 1 Chron. v, 26); and there is reason to believe that almost every Assyrian monarch of the period made war in this direction. It seems to have been during a pause in the struggle that Rezin, king of Damascus, and Pekah, king of Israel, resolved conjointly to attack Jerusalem, intending to depose Ahaz and set up as king a creature of their own (Isa. vii, 1–6; 2 Kings xvi, 5). Ahaz may have already been suspected of a friendly feeling towards Assyria, or the object may simply have been to consolidate a power capable of effectually opposing the arms of that country. In either case the attempt signally failed, and only brought about more rapidly the evil against which the two kings wished to guard. Jerusalem successfully maintained itself against the combined attack; but Elath, which had formerly been built by Azariah, king of Judah, in territory regarded as Syrian (2 Kings xiv, 22), having been taken and retained by Rezin (ib. xvi, 6), Ahaz was induced to throw himself into the arms of Tiglath-Pileser, to ask aid from him, and to accept voluntarily the position of an Assyrian feudatory (ib. xvi, 7–8). The aid sought was given, with the important result that Rezin was slain, the kingdom of Damascus brought to an end, and the city itself destroyed, the inhabitants being carried captive into Assyria (ib. ver. 9; comp. Isa. vii, 8, and Amos i, 5). Among the sculptures lately discovered on the site of Nineveh are thought to be delineations of this siege and capture of Damascus. Rawlinson even reads the name of the city on an obelisk connected with them (Bonomi, Nineveh, p. 234 sq.). Assyrian remains have lately been discovered in a mound near Damascus (Journal of Sacred Literature, October, 1854, p. 218; January, 1855, p. 469). See ASSYRIA.

Final Assault of Damascus. From the Assyrian Monuments.

Captivity of the Inhabitants. From the same.

It was long before Damascus recovered from this serious blow. As Isaiah and Amos had prophesied in the day of her prosperity that Damascus should be "taken away from being a city and be a ruinous heap" (Isa. xvii, 1), that "a fire should be sent into the house of Hazael which should devour the palaces of Benhadad" (Amos i, 4), so Jeremiah, writing about B.C. 600, declares "Damascus is waxed feeble and turneth herself to flee, and fear hath seized on her; anguish and sorrows have taken her as a woman in travail. How is the city of praise not left, the city of my joy!" (Jer. xlix, 24–5). Damascus remained a province of Assyria until the capture of Nineveh by the Medes (B.C. 625), when it submitted to the conquerors. Its wealth and commercial prosperity appear to have declined for a considerable period, probably on account of the ravages of Tiglath-Pileser, and the captivity of the most influential and enterprising of its people. The city was afterwards held in succession by the Egyptians, Babylonians, and Persians. We have no particulars of its history for a period of three centuries. Under the rule of the Persians it was the capital of the province of Syria, and the residence of the satrap. We do not know at what time Damascus was rebuilt, but Strabo says that it was the most famous place in Syria during the Persian period (xvi, 2, § 19). When Darius, the last king of Persia, made his great effort to repress the rising power, and bar the progress of Alexander of Macedon, it was in this city he deposited his family and treasures (Arrian, Exp. Al. ii, 11). The fate of Damascus, with that of all Western Asia, was decided by the battle of Issus, in which the Persian army was almost annihilated. Damascus now became the capital of a province which Alexander gave to his general Laomedon (Plut. Vit. Alexandri). During the long wars which raged between the Seleucidæ and the Ptolemies, Damascus had no separate history: it sometimes fell to the one, and sometimes to the other. Antioch was founded, and became their favorite residence, and the capital of the Seleucidæ; but when the Syrian kingdom was divided in B.C. 126, Damascus was made the second capital. Its territory embraced Cœle-Syria, Phœnicia, and the country east of the Jordan, and it was afterwards governed in succession by four princes of the family of Seleucus. Damascus and Antioch thus became the seats of rival factions, and aspirants after complete sovereignty (Joseph. Ant. xiii, 13, 4, and 15, 1). The last of these princes, Antiochus Dionysus, was killed in battle against Aretas, king of Arabia, and the Damascenes forthwith elected Aretas his successor (Josephus, Ant. xiii, 15, 1), B.C. 84. In the year B.C. 64, the Romans, under Pompey, invaded and captured Syria, constituted it a province of the empire, and made Damascus the seat of government (ib. xiv, 2, 3, and 4, 5; Mos. Chorен. i, 14; Appian, Bell. Mithrid. p. 224). From Josephus (War, i, 2; xxv, 2; xx, 2; comp. Acts ix, 2) it appears that its population contained great numbers of Jews.

Coin of Damascus.

For twenty years Damascus continued to be the residence of the Roman procurators. The city prospered under their firm and equitable rule, and even after their removal to Antioch did not decline. Strabo, who flourished at this period, describes it as one of the most magnificent cities of the East. Nicolaüs, the famous historian and philosopher, the friend of Herod the Great and Augustus, was now one of its citizens (Strabo, Geogr. xvi; Josephus, Ant. xvi, 10, 8). But the strong arm of Rome was not sufficient to quell the fiery spirit of the Syrians. The whole country was rent into factions, and embroiled by the unceasing rivalries and wars of petty princes. About the year A.D. 37, a family quarrel led to a war between Aretas, king of Arabia, and Herod Antipas. The Roman governor, Vitellius, was instructed to interfere in favor of the latter; but when he was ready to attack Aretas, who had already driven back Herod, news arrived of the death of the emperor Tiberius. The government of Syria was thus thrown into confusion, and Vitellius returned to Antioch (Joseph. Ant. xviii, 5, 1–3). It appears that now Aretas, taking advantage of the state of affairs, followed up his successes, advanced upon Damascus, and seized the city. It was during his brief rule (or some earlier one) that Paul visited Damascus on his return from Arabia (Gal. i, 16, 17). See ARETAS. His zeal as a missionary, and the energy with which he opposed every form of idolatry, had probably attracted the notice and excited the enmity of Aretas; and consequently, when informed by the Jews that the apostle had returned to the city, he was anxious to secure him, and gave orders to the governor to watch the gates day and night for that purpose (Acts ix, 24; 2 Cor. xi, 32. See Neander, Planting and Training of the Christian Church, i, 106). The Romans adorned Damascus with many splendid buildings, the ruins of which still exist. Some of them were probably designed by Apollodorus, a native of the city, and one of the most celebrated architects of his age, to whose genius we are indebted for one of the most beautiful monuments of ancient Rome, the Column of Trajan (Dion Cass. lxix). A little later it was reckoned to Decapolis (Plin. Hist. Nat. v, 16), after which it became a part of the province known as Phœnicia-Libanesia (Hierocl. Synecd. p. 717).

Christianity was planted in Damascus by Paul himself (Acts ix, 20 sq.; Gal. i, 12), and obtained a firm footing in the apostolic age. It spread so rapidly among the population that in the time of Constantine the great temple, one of the noblest buildings in Syria, was converted into a cathedral church and dedicated to John the Baptist. When the first general council assembled at Nice, Magnus, the metropolitan of Damascus, was present with seven of his suffragans. But the Roman empire was now waxing feeble, and the religion which, by its establishment as a national institute, ought to have infused the germ of a new life into the declining state, was itself losing its purity and its power. Damascus felt, like other places, the demoralizing tendencies of a corrupt faith. In the beginning of the 7th century a new and terrible power appeared upon the stage of the world's history, destined, in the hands of an all-wise though mysterious Providence, to overthrow a degenerate empire and chastise an erring Church. In A.D. 634 Damascus opened its gates to the Mohammedans, and thirty years later the first caliph of the Omeiades transferred the seat of his government to that city. It now became for a brief period the capital of a vast empire, including Syria, Mesopotamia, Persia, Northern Africa, and Spain (Elmacin, Hist. Sarac. xiii). In A.D. 750 the Omeiades were supplanted by the dynasty of Abbas, and the court was removed to Bagdad. A stormy period of four centuries now passed over the old city without leaving a single incident worthy of special note. An attack of the Crusaders (A.D. 1148), under the three chiefs, Baldwin, Conrad, and Louis VII, might have claimed a place here had it not been so disgraceful to the Christian arms. It is enough to say that the cross never displaced the crescent on the battlements of Damascus. The reigns of Nureddin and his more distinguished successor Saladin form bright epochs in the city's history. Two centuries later came Timur, who literally swept Damascus with "the besom

Dance. This act is usually denoted in Heb. by some form of חוּל, chul, which literally signifies to twist (and is often applied to writhing under pain, as of birth, or trembling under fear), and hence probably refers to the whirling motions of the Oriental sacred dances (Judg. xxi, 21, 23; Psa. xxx, 11; cxlix, 3; cl, 4; Jer. xxxi, 4, 13; Lam. v, 15; Exod. xv, 20; xxxii, 19; Judg. xi, 34; 1 Sam. xviii, 6; xxi, 21; xxix, 5; Cant. vi, 13). A similar idea of moving in a circle is radically contained in the word חָגַג, chagag', translated "dancing" in 1 Sam. xxx, 16. Another term thus rendered (Eccles. iii, 4, Job xxi, 11; Isa. xiii, 21; 1 Chron. xv, 29) is רָקַד, rakad', which simply means to skip or leap for joy, as it is elsewhere rendered, and is nearly equivalent to a fourth term thus translated (2 Sam. vi, 14, 16), כָּרַר, karar', which means to jump or spring. In the New Test. the terms translated "dance" are χορός (radically expressive of the same idea of circular motion), applied to a festive occasion in connection with music (Luke xv, 25), and ὀρχέομαι, literally to leap up and down, but conventionally used in later times to denote a regular dance according to rule, either in concert (Matt. xi, 17; Luke vii, 32) or by a single person, especially in the elaborate pantomime dance of Roman times (Matt. xiv, 6; Mark vi, 22). (See Smith's Dict. of Class. Antiq. s. v. Saltatio, Pantomimus.)

As emotions of joy and sorrow universally express themselves in movements and gestures of the body, efforts have been made among all nations, but especially among those of the South and East, in proportion as they seem to be more demonstrative, to reduce to measure and to strengthen by unison the more pleasurable—those of joy. The dance is spoken of in holy Scripture universally as symbolical of some rejoicing, and is often coupled for the sake of contrast with mourning, as in Eccles. iii, 4, "a time to mourn and a time to dance" (comp. Psa. xxx, 11; Matt. xi, 17). Children dance spontaneously (Job xxi, 11; Matt. xi, 17; Luke vii, 32).

1. At a very early period, dancing was enlisted into the service of religion among the heathen; the dance, enlivened by vocal and instrumental music, was a usual accompaniment in all the processions and festivals of the gods (Strabo, x); and, indeed, so indispensable was this species of violent merriment, that no ceremonial was considered duly accomplished—no triumph rightly celebrated, without the aid of dancing. The Hebrews, in common with other nations, had their sacred dances, which were performed on their solemn anniversaries, and other occasions of commemorating some special token of the divine goodness and favor, as means of drawing forth, in the liveliest manner, their expressions of joy and thanksgiving. The performers were usually a band of females, who, in cases of public rejoicing, volunteered their services (Exod. xv, 20; 1 Sam. xviii, 6), and who, in the case of religious observances, composed the regular chorus of the temple (Psa. cxlix, 3; cl, 4), although there are not wanting instances of men also joining in the dance on these seasons of religious festivity. Thus David deemed it no way derogatory to his royal dignity to dance on the auspicious occasion of the ark being brought up to Jerusalem (2 Sam. vi, 14, 16). The word used to describe his attitude is significant of violent efforts of leaping (מְפַזֵּז וּמְכַרְכֵּר בְּכָל־עֹז); and, from the apparent impropriety and indecency of a man advanced in life, above all a king, exhibiting such freaks, with no other covering than a linen ephod, many learned men have declared themselves at a loss to account for so strange a spectacle. It was, unquestionably, done as an act of religious homage; and when it is remembered that the ancient Asiatics were accustomed, in many of their religious festivals, to throw off their garments even to perfect nudity, as a symbol sometimes of penitence, sometimes of joy, and that this, together with many other observances that bear the stamp of a remote antiquity, was adopted by Mohammed, who has enjoined the pilgrims of Mecca to encompass the Kaaba clothed only with the ihram, we may perhaps consider the linen ephod, which David put on when he threw off his garments and danced before the ark, to be symbolic of the same objects as the ihram of the Mohammedans (see Foster's Mohammedanism Unveiled). The conduct of David was imitated by the later Jews, and the dance was incorporated among their favorite usages as an appropriate close of the joyous occasion of the feast of Tabernacles. "The members of the Sanhedrim, the rulers of the synagogues, doctors of schools, and all who were eminent for rank or piety, accompanied the sacred music with their voices, and leaped and danced with torches in their hands for a great part of the night, while the women and common people looked on." This strange and riotous kind of festivity was kept up till exhaustion and sleep dismissed them to their homes (Buxtorf, De Synag. Jud. cap. 21).

The character of the ancient dance was very different from that of ours, as appears from the conduct of Miriam, who "took a timbrel in her hand, and all the women went out after her with timbrels and with dances." Precisely similar is the Oriental dance of the present day, which, accompanied of course with music, is led by the principal person of the company, the rest imitating the steps. The evolutions, as well as the songs, are extemporaneous—not confined to a fixed rule, but varied at the pleasure of the leading dancer; and yet they are generally executed with so much grace, and the time so well kept with the simple notes of the music, that the group of attendants show wonderful address and propriety in following the variations of the leader's feet. The missionary Wolff describes a festival of some Eastern Christians, where one eminent individual, who led the song as well as the dance, conducted through the streets of the city a numerous band of people, who leaped and danced in artistic and graceful attitudes. A parallelism of movement is also incident to it (Saalschütz, ib. p. 301). Possibly Miriam so led her countrywomen. The same writer thinks that in Cant. vi, 13, the words מְחֹלַת מַחֲנָיִם (A.V. "company of two armies") imply two rows of dancing girls, and that the address in the singular number, "return, return," and again in vii, 1, applies to the movements of the individual performer in a kind of contre-danse. This interpretation, however, does not remove the obscurities of the passage.

From being exclusively, or at least principally, reserved for occasions of religious worship and festivity, dancing came gradually to be practised in common life on any remarkable seasons of mirth and rejoicing (Jer. xxxi, 4; Psa. xxx, 11). In early times, indeed, those who perverted the exercise from a sacred use to purposes of amusement were considered profane and infamous; and hence Job introduces it as a distinguishing feature in the character of the ungodly rich, that they encouraged a taste for dancing in their families (Job xxi, 11). During the classic ages of Greece and Rome society underwent a complete revolution of sentiment on this subject, insomuch that the Grecian poets represent the gods themselves as passionately fond of the diversion (Potter's Grec. Antiq. ii, 400), and that not only at Rome, but through all the provinces of the empire it was a favorite pastime, resorted to not only to enliven feasts, but in the celebration of domestic joy (Luke xv, 25; Matt. xiv, 6). Notwithstanding, however, the strong partiality cherished for this inspiriting amusement, it was considered beneath the dignity of persons of rank and character to practise it. The well-known words of Cicero, that "no one dances unless he is either drunk or mad," express the prevailing sense as to the impropriety of respectable individuals taking part in it; and hence the gay circles of Rome and its provinces derived all their entertainment, as is done in the East to this day, from the exhibitions of professional dancers. Under the patronage of the emperors, and of their luxurious tributaries, like Herod, the art was carried to the utmost perfection, the favorite mode being pantomime, which, like that of the modern Almehs or Arab women, was often of the most licentious description (see Lane's Mod. Eg. ii, 105-9; St. John's Nubia, p. 268 sq.). A story of love was chosen—generally an adventure of the gods—as the plan of the dance, and the address of the performer consisted in representing, by the waving of his hands, the agility of his limbs, and the innumerable attitudes into which he threw himself, all the various passions of love, jealousy, disgust, that sway the human breast. (See at large Lucian's Treatise on Dancing.)

Amateur dancing in high life was, as that writer informs us, by no means uncommon in the voluptuous times of the later emperors. But in the age of Herod it was exceedingly rare and almost unheard of, and therefore the condescension of Salome, who volunteered, in honor of the anniversary of that monarch's birthday, to exhibit her handsome person as she led the mazy dance in the saloons of Machærus—for, though she was a child at this time, as some suppose (Michaelis, Introd.), she was still a princess—was felt to be a compliment that merited the highest reward. The folly and rashness of Herod in giving her an unlimited promise, great as they were, have been equalled and even surpassed by the munificence which many other Eastern monarchs have lavished upon favorite dancers. Shah Abbas (to mention only one anecdote of the kind), having been on a particular occasion extremely gratified with a woman who danced before him, and being at the time much intoxicated, made her a present of a magnificent khan that yielded him a considerable revenue. Next morning his minister reminded him of his extravagant liberality, whereupon, being now cool and ashamed of his folly, he sent for the dancer, and obliged her to be contented with a sum of money (Thevenot's Trav. in Persia, p. 100). It is by no means improbable that Herod too was flushed with wine, and that it was from fear he should retract his promise if she delayed till the morning that Herodias sent immediately for the head of the Baptist.

It remains to notice further that the Jewish dance was performed by the sexes separately. There is no evidence from sacred history that the diversion was promiscuously enjoyed, except it might be at the erection of the deified calf, when, in imitation of the Egyptian festival of Apis, all classes of the Hebrews intermingled in the frantic revelry. In the sacred dances, although both sexes seem to have frequently borne a part in the procession or chorus, they remained in distinct and separate companies (Psa. lxviii, 25; Jer. xxxi, 13.

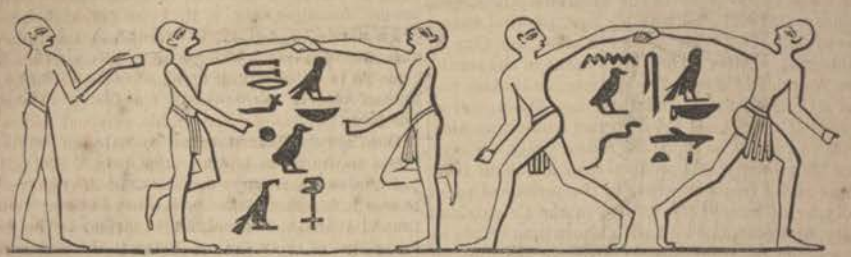
Dancing formed a part of the religious ceremonies of the Egyptians, and was also common in private entertainments (see Wilkinson's Anc. Eg. abridgment, i, 153 sq.). Many representations of dances both of men and women are found in the Egyptian paintings. The "feast unto the Lord," which Moses proposed to Pharaoh to hold, was really a dance (חג; see above).—Kitto, s. v.; Smith s. v.



Male Dance in Figures among the ancient Egyptians.

A modern Oriental dancing-party is thus described by Layard (Nineveh, i, 119): "The dance of the Arabs, the Debkè, as it is called, resembles in some respects that of the Albanians, and those who perform in it are scarcely less vehement in their gestures or less extravagant in their excitement than those wild mountaineers. They form a circle, holding one another by the hand, and, moving slowly round at first, go through a shuffling step with their feet, twisting their bodies into various attitudes. As the music quickens their movements are more active; they stamp with their feet, yell their war-cry, and jump as they hurry round the musicians. The motions of the women are not without grace; but as they insist on wrapping themselves in their coarse cloaks before they join in the dance, their forms, which the simple Arab shirt so well displays, are entirely concealed. When those who formed the debkè were completely exhausted by their exertions, they joined the lookers-on, and seated themselves on the ground. Two warriors of different tribes, furnished with shields and naked cimeters, then entered the circle, and went through the sword-dance. As the music quickened the excitement of the performers increased. The by-standers at length were obliged to interfere and to deprive the combatants of their weapons, which were replaced by stout staves. With these they belabored one another unmercifully, to the great enjoyment of the crowd. On every successful hit, the tribe to which the one who dealt it belonged set up their war-cry and shouts of applause, while the women deafened us with the shrill tahlehl, a noise made by a combined motion of the tongue, throat, and hand vibrated rapidly over the mouth. When an Arab or a Kurd hears this tahlehl he almost loses his senses through excitement, and is ready to commit any desperate act. A party of Kurdish jesters from the mountains entertained the Arabs with performances and imitations more amusing than refined. They were received with shouts of laughter. The dances were kept up by the light of the moon the greater part of the night."

Dancers, a sect which appeared on the Rhine and in the Netherlands about 1374. They paraded the streets, entered houses and churches half naked, crowned with garlands, dancing and singing, uttering unknown names, falling senseless on the ground, and exhibiting other marks of demoniacal agitation. It was customary for persons of both sexes, in their public worship, to begin dancing; and, holding each other's hands, to continue their extraordinary violence till they fell down on the ground breathless. They affirmed that during these intervals of vehement agitation they were favored with wonderful visions. They evinced open contempt for the authority, rites, and doctrines of the Roman Church, and were considered as possessed with devils. The same phenomena appeared at Strasburg in 1418.—Mosheim, Ch. Hist. ii, 416; Gieseler, Ch. History, § 121.

Dancing. A form of religious dancing sometimes made part of the public worship of the early Christians. The custom was borrowed from the Jews, in whose solemn processions choirs of young men and maidens, moving in time with solemn music, always bore a part. It must not be supposed that the "religious dances" had any similarity to modern amusements; they were rather processions in which all who took part marched in time with the hymns which they sung. The custom was very early laid aside, probably because it might have led to the adoption of such objectionable dances as were employed in honor of the pagan deities. Prohibitions of dancing, as an amusement, abound in the Church fathers and in the decrees of the councils. See Bingham, Orig. Eccl. bk. xvi, ch. xi, § 15. On dancing as an amusement, see Crane, On Dancing, N. Y, 12mo.

Dandini, Girolamo, a Roman theologian and papal legate, was born at Cesena in 1554. After being professor of philosophy at the University of Paris, and professor of theology at the University of Padua, he entered the order of Jesuits, and became its provincial in Poland and at Milan. In 1596 he was sent by Clement XI as nuncio to the Maronites in order to effect their union with the Church of Rome, but in this mission he was not successful. He died at Forli Nov. 29, 1634. He is the author of a work on Ethica Sacra (Cesena, 1651; Antw. 1676, fol.). He also published a report on his mission to the Maronites (Missione Apostolica al Patriarcha e Maroniti del Monte Libano (Cesena, 1656; Paris, 1675; English, 1698). According to the French translator, Richard Simon, Dandini gave an incorrect account of the creed of the Maronites.—Pierer, Univers. Lex. iv, 686; Hoefer, Biog. Gén. xii, 910.

Danforth, Calvin, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Fort Covington, Franklin Co., N. Y., Nov. 28, 1809, was licensed to exhort in 1828, entered the Oneida Conference in 1830, was superannuated in 1834, went South for his health, and took a situation in an academy at Warrenton, Ga., still retaining his connection with the Church in the North. Fiat ut petitur, "Be it according to the petition." The pope's bull granting the benefice is then dispatched by the datary, and passes through the hands of many persons, belonging to different offices, who have all their stated fees. It is very expensive to procure the pope's bull for a benefice, and very large sums go into the office of the datary, especially when the provisions are for bishoprics, or other rich benefices.—Buck, Theol. Dict. s. v.; Farrar, s. v.

Dathe, JOHANN AUGUST, an eminent Oriental scholar and Biblical critic, was born at Weissenfels July 4, 1731, became professor of Oriental literature at Leipsic in 1762, and died March 17, 1791, at Leipsic. His chief work is Libri Vet. Test. ex recensione textus Heb. notisque philolog. et crit. illustrati (Halæ, 1791, 6 vols. 8vo). He also edited Glassius, Philologia Sacra, and the Prolegomena to Walton's Polyglot (Lips. 1777); a Syriac Psalter, with the translation and notes of Erpenius (Halle, 1768); and (posthumous) Opuscula ad Crisin et interp. Vet. Test. spectantia (ed. by Rosenmüller, jun., Lips. 1795).

Date (2 Chron. xxxi, 5, margin, for דְּבַשׁ, debash', "honey," Sept. μέλι, Vulg. mel), the fruit of one species of the palm (תָּמָר [Talm. דֶּקֶל, comp. δάκτυλος, date], φοῖνιξ, Phœnix dactilifera of Linn.). This tree formerly grew abundantly in Palestine (Joel i, 12; Neh. viii, 15; Judg. iv, 5; Mishna, Biccurim, i, 10; comp. Pliny, xiii, 6; Tacitus, Hist. v, 6, 2; Theoph. Plant. ii, 8; Pausan. ix, 19, 5), especially in certain warm localities (Schubert, Reisen, p. 105), namely, around Jericho (which hence was called the Palm City, Josephus, Ant. xv, 4, 2; Pliny, v, 15; xiii, 9; Strabo, xvi, 763; Philostr. Apollon. vi, 39), En-gedi (Solin. xxxviii, 12), and the Dead Sea (Diod. Sic. ii, 48; xix, 98); also at the Sea of Galilee (Josephus, War, iii, 10, 8); as a stately tree (especially fine at Jericho, Strabo xvii, 800; Galen, Facult. alim. ii, 26; Buxtorf, Lex. Chald. col. 1109; Pliny, xiii, 9), so that on Jewish and Roman coins (also Phœnician, Spanheim, Præstant. et us. num. p. 272) it was even employed as the symbol of the country (Froelich, Ann. Syr. tab. 18; see the praises of Idumæan palms in Virgil, Georg. iii, 12; Sil. Ital. iii, 600; vii, 456; Lucan, iii, 216; Martial, x, 50, 1). At present it is seldom to be met with there (Shaw, Travels, p. 297; Schubert, iii, 114; at Jericho there exists but a solitary one, Robinson, Researches, ii, 537; at En-gedi none whatever, Robinson, ii, 441); they are abundant, however, and even grow wild in Arabia (in Arabia Petræa they were anciently found here and there, Exod. xv, 27; Num. xxxiii, 9; comp. Burckhardt, Reisen, ii, 815; Robinson, i, 256, 264), in Egypt (Strabo, xvii, p. 818; Gellius, vii, 16, 5; Prosp. Alpin. Plantt. Æg. c. 7) and Persia (Kämpfer, Amoen. p. 669: on the extent of the date-palm, see Link, Urwelt, i, 347 sq.; Arago, in the Annuaire du Bureau des Longitudes, 1834), in which countries it has from antiquity been regarded as the choicest of fruit-trees (Strabo, xvi, 742; Plato, Sympos. viii, 4-5; compare Hasselquist, p. 541). It loves a light, sandy, warm soil (Josephus, War, iii, 10, 8), yet not one deficient in moisture (Sirach xxiv, 14; Strabo, xvi, 776; Pallad. R. R. xi, 12), attains a height of 30 to 40 (in some instances 60 and even 100) feet, and lives till about 200 years old (Pliny, xvi, 89; Plutarch, Sympos. viii, 4, 2; Shaw, p. 128; comp. [in the Sept.] Job xxix, 18); it has a slim (Cant. vii, 7), straight, single trunk of 10 to 18 inches' diameter, covered rather with the scaly remains of the boughs that have fallen or broken off than with a proper bark. At its summit only the palm bears a large number (40 to 80) slender branches, which, growing shorter and shorter towards the top (the bottom ones being some 20 feet long), and bending at the ends in a curve towards the ground, inclose a considerable extent of shade (Wellsted, i, 70). The boughs generally surround the body in a circle six in number, and put forth rush-like, sword-shaped, evergreen (Psa. xcii, 13; comp. Shaw, p. 128) leaves, about 2 inches broad, and 8 to 12 feet long. In the midst of the topmost and youngest branches is found a pointed, pithy heart (ἐγκέφαλον, or head), nearly two yards in length, which contains the buds of new twigs and leaves (this, when cut off, was relished as a dainty article of food from the taste of the drupes, Theophr. Plantt. ii, 8; Pliny, xiii, 9; Mishna, Okzin, iii, 7; Mariti, Trav. p. 407). Staminate and pistillate flowers are upon separate stems. This renders an artificial fertilization necessary in order to insure the produce (see Mishna, Pesach, iv, 8; Ammian. Marc. xxiv, 3, p. 13, Bip.), for which the right time must be very exactly observed. For in February there appear on the stem, at the joints of the lowest branches, long (even one yard) capsules, inclosed in a leathery skin, which in May shoot up into male blossoms and female buttons. The former are now plucked off (about March), slit through the length, and inserted upon the female germs (Kämpfer, Amoen. p. 707; Hasselquist, p. 133, 223 sq.; Shaw, p. 127; Thevenot, ii, 170). See BOTGH.

Cluster of Date-palm Fruit.

The fruit (Talm. קְתָבָה, Surenhusius, Mischna, ii, 253; vi, 91), which comes to maturity in about five months (August and September, or October), hangs in clusters (Cant. vii, 7) together, in form like the acorn, but mostly larger, and with a fine ruddy (Diod. Sic. ii, 53) or white skin. The best kind is called jeni. They were sometimes used in a fresh state (Heliod. Æth. ii, 23; comp. Hasselquist, p. 540) as a very common article of food (Burckhardt, Arab. p. 45, 575; Harmar, iii, 415), sometimes dried as a dessert-fruit (Xenoph. Anab. ii, 3, 15), and sometimes their juice was pressed out (comp. Jonathan's Targum on Deut. viii, 8), which, as date-wine (οἶνος φοινίκων), was made use of from ancient times (Herod. i, 193; iii, 86; Xenoph. Anab. ii, 3, 14; Pliny, xiii, 9; xiv, 19; Philostr. Apol. ii, 6, 1; Athen. xiv, 651; Strabo, xvi, p. 742; Dioscor. v, 40; Wilkinson, iii, 174 sq.), or occasionally
